A LESSON IN HUMILITY

This week's issue of The Pine Cone is the first under the new ownership of Kirstie Wilde and Paul Miller of Pacific Grove.

By Paul Miller and Kirstie Wilde

TWO WEEKS ago we were feeling pretty proud of ourselves.

Months of negotiation had borne fruit, and the congratulations were pouring in about our impending purchase of The Carmel Pine Cone. When we got home at night there'd be 17 or 18 messages from friends telling us how happy they were, and how sure they were that we'd do a great job . . . .

The wisdom of Carmel's Mayor, Ken White, brought us back down to earth. Last week, we'd just sat down for lunch at Anton & Michel when Mayor White told us, "You know, you won't really be the owners of the Pine Cone. The people of Carmel own their newspaper, no matter what some legal document says."

Pine Cone readers have strict standards of objectivity and fairness. Try to sell them opinion disguised as news and you'll hear about it before the sun goes down!

He wasn't joking. The owner of a newspaper may hire and fire the employees, set ad rates and determine the paper's day-to-day content. But the newspaper's customers—its readers and advertisers—will pass judgment on the owner's job performance. And if he doesn't measure up they'll turn their backs on the paper, effectively firing the guy who thought he was in charge.

That principle applies here in Carmel perhaps more than anywhere else. Readers of The Pine Cone are an intelligent bunch . . . more than 50 percent have college degrees. Perhaps because of their intelligence, Pine Cone readers have strict standards of objectivity and fairness. Try to sell them opinion disguised as news and you'll hear about it before the sun goes down!

Even more important, they are deeply involved in community affairs and local politics. Underlying their civic pride is a belief—almost universally held in these parts—that the community we live and work in is as close to perfect as any spot on earth. All change is suspect, since it's tough to improve perfection.

Them against him: Potter sole dissenter in spa-hotel project, approved Tuesday

By PAUL WOLF

THERE WAS a good reason why Dave Potter rushed to make comments before his four colleagues on the Monterey County Board of Supervisors deliberated and called for a vote.

He had a lot of persuading to do.

With Tuesday's 4-1 approval of the Casa Palmero spa, hotel and parking project in Pebble Beach, Potter found himself in the familiar role of lone dissenter, and facing what appeared to be a foregone conclusion.

Potter — whose district encompasses most of the Peninsula, most of Carmel Valley and all of Pebble Beach and Big Sur — spoke fervently about environmental sensitivity, "cumulative impacts" of development and "residential values."

Dave Potter (right) tried to change minds, including that of Tom Perkins, also shown.

"The development balloon is now overexpanded and it is going to pop at any time — this time at the expense of the residents of Pebble Beach," Potter said, speaking moments before the board approved the expansion of the eight-bedroom Palmero mansion into a 24-unit inn and spa.

The project had already been approved by the county planning commission, and was given the thumbs-up on a 9-to-1 vote by the Del Monte Forest Property Owners Association earlier in the week.

The Pebble Beach Co. bought the 68-year-old structure and had it rezoned from "residential" to "visitor-commercial" in 1994. A key component of the project will be a 315-space parking facility, with 230 spaces underground and 85 at ground level.

The mansion is located next to The Lodge, between the Tennis Club and the second hole of the Pebble Beach Golf Links.

Potter said the Casa Palmero project is the precursor of larger things to come — namely, the proposed Pebble Beach Lot Program, which includes 350 new homes and a new 18-hole golf course in the Del Monte Forest.

Farr hopes High Court will uphold Line-Item Veto

By TAMARA GRIPPI

CONGRESSMAN SAM Farr, D-Carmel, had serious reservations about the Republican-sponsored Line-Item Veto Act when it was approved by Congress last year. But he says he hopes that the Clinton administration will prevail in its appeal of a ruling by a federal judge who struck down the line-item veto bill last week. "The president realizes the only possibility for the line-item veto is to get the Supreme Court to uphold it (the current bill), even with all its flaws," Farr told the Pine Cone yesterday.

Farr says he has long supported the concept of a Presidential line-item veto. He would rather see a Democratic version of the line-item veto become law. Now, Farr says he believes the only way Clinton will secure the line-item veto as a tool is if the Supreme

Carmel seeks concessions on Ord reuse

■ Short of votes on FORA, city, neighbors seek modest changes to plan

By PAUL WOLF

RECOGNIZING THAT they are outnumbered on the Fort Ord Reuse Authority (FORA) board, Carmel and its Peninsula neighbors are hoping for last-minute concessions that will lead to a reuse plan everyone can live with.

Marina, Seaside, Del Rey Oaks and Sand City dominate the 13-member board. That simple fact has led Carmel, Monterey and Pacific Grove respresentatives on the board to look for modest amendments to the final plan and environmental impact report (EIR), both released on March 23.

Ken White, Dan Albert and Sandy Koffman — the Mayors of Carmel, Monterey and Pacific Grove, respectively — say they want stricter growth controls and stronger assurances that the reuse as a whole won't outstrip the region's transportation and water services.

"It is possible we may vote yes on this plan, so long as there are enough checks and balances to meet with our satisfaction," said Carmel Mayor Ken White, who Monday joined PG Mayor Sandy Koffman for a private meeting with Marina Mayor Jim Vocelka.

"We have to do a very persuasive job of getting a few changes made, and, believe me, we are going to be negotiating like hell," White said.

The FORA board's "weighted vote" creates the potential for a solid majority that favors the more aggressive reuse aspirations of the northern cities, particularly Seaside, Marina and Del Rey Oaks. Those cities felt the most pain from the shut down of Fort Ord, and they were given the most say about what will take the Army's place on the giant base.

Carmel, PG and Monterey, which tend to favor slow and limited growth — or no growth at all — are not completely without bargaining power at this late stage in the game: Marina and Seaside can move forward with more confidence if they secure overwhelming approval of the plan, rather than a squeak-through victory.

"The closer the vote is to unanimous, the better," Vocelka said. "We want to avoid a legal battle coming from the people who are against any kind of reuse."

Seaside Mayor Don Jordan agreed. "It

Wheelchair-bound Carmel teen seeks access to beach

Ben Spangenberg pitches boardwalk idea to council, task force

By JERRY STEWART

EVER SINCE moving to Carmel back in 1994, Ben Spangenberg, now 15, has enjoyed going down to Carmel Beach.

But unfortunately, the trip isn't as easy for Spangenberg as it is for most teenagers.

He can't just walk to the shore because he has spina bifida, which keeps him in a wheelchair. So if Ben wants to visit the shoreline, he has to be carried.

But Spangenberg is busy working on a solution, not only for himself but for others as well.

"I want to make Carmel Beach accessible for those who are physically challenged," he said.

And last month, Ben made his request known before the Carmel City Council and the Carmel Beach Master Plan Task Force.

"Mayor (Ken) White said he's glad I'm doing this and hopes things can work out," said the Carmel High School freshman. "He said he would put the issue on a future agenda."

For Ben, this is not the first issue he has brought to the council's attention since moving here from Palo Alto.

New battles

Last year, Ben played an instrumental part in getting a handicapped lift installed in the Carmel Youth Center.

As part of a fund drive that netted more than $20,000, Ben teamed up with Pat Lenz, executive director of the youth center, to put on a charity basketball game between wheelchair athletes and their freemoving counterparts.

And as a result of the drive, the youth center is now handicapped-accessible.

"There are those who are disabled but are embarrassed to ask for help. And then there's the opposite, those who just get angry and that's not good," the teenager's mother, Stefani Spangenberg, said. "But then there are those who get things done."

In a letter directed to the city council and beach task force, Spangenberg suggested a few possible solutions of his own, including construction of a ramp at Scenic Drive between Eighth and Ninth where slopes leading to the beach already exist.

"This ramp could be built out of wood, similar to the ramps which are at Asilomar State Beach," Spangenberg said.

Currently, the city of Santa Cruz offers two balloon-tired beach wheelchairs at the wharf for disabled visitors.

"I think balloon tires would work here, but you would still have to cope with the hill," he said.

Key questions

One thing is clear: City officials are going to have to do a lot of thinking before any large-scale changes are approved at Carmel Beach.

Jean Grace, task force chairwoman and

Caltrans to Measure Driver Frustration on CV Road

By KIRSTIE WILDE

AT 3:30 on most any afternoon, it's the biggest parking lot in the Carmel area, and it's growing. By all accounts, traffic delays at the intersections where Highway One crosses Carmel Valley Road and Rio Road are getting longer.

Because of a big increase in complaints at the Caltrans Traffic Operations Center in San Luis Obispo, Caltrans' Julie Gonzales will conduct a new "delay analysis" at the intersections next week.

The last time Gonzales and her team counted cars sitting in traffic at the intersections was April 14, 1993, just after the signal light was installed on Carmel Valley Road. The study was done at 2:15 PM and the longest line of cars they counted trying to get through the intersection was 37; the longest wait was just over two minutes.

"We know it is much worse now, just based on the angry calls we're getting," she admits. "There's gridlock at River Road, complaints about a mile-long backup on Carmel Valley Road, another bad bottleneck at Carmel Rancho feeding more sand into the neck of the hourglass."

With Hatton Canyon behind them, cars await their opportunity to turn right onto Highway One from Carmel Valley Road. The scene repeats almost every afternoon.

Gonzales has changed the timing on the lights several times, to "try to make it more fair," she says. "But every time I lengthen the green light in one direction, somebody obviously has to wait longer on the other side. Then they get irate and let us know. Driver aggression is definitely increasing in the area. People get frustrated and try to push through on the yellow even if there is no place to go. "

HUMILITY

Mayor White wasn't the only one who shrank our swelled heads. Our lawyer, the irreplaceable Jim Heisinger, has lived in Carmel nearly all his life and delivered the Pine Cone door-to-door as a boy. He let us know what a high standard we'd be measured against.

One of our town's top Realtors and an outstanding businesswoman, Rita Lewis of Coldwell Banker/Del Monte Realty, worked for the Pine Cone nearly 20 years ago. The owner in those days, she told us, was a "terrific newspaperman" who worked overtime to serve his readers.

And this week, The Pine Cone's dedicated staff has informed us in no uncertain terms how hard it will be for us to fill the shoes of the paper's respected outgoing Publisher, Doug Thompson, and its 15-year owners, Bill and Chip Brown. We are grateful to these three fine gentlemen and hope to do at least as well they did in maintining the traditions of the Pine Cone.

Through its 82 years, the Carmel Pine Cone has been a mirror that reflected the many components of Carmel's unique charm—its stunning natural beauty, its quaint architecture, its artistic heritage, and its fascinating people. We've got a lot of work to do to meet the high expectations you have for this, your Carmel newspaper.

With your help, we will succeed.

Carmel Valley: A woman reported receiving a telephone call at her place of business from an unknown male soliciting funds for an unknown firefighters association. The subject was going to pick up a $50 check from the reporting party. The male subject never showed up for the check and the woman thought this was very suspicious. Gonzales is responsible for monitoring 300 state highway intersections in Santa Cruz, Monterey, San Benito and San Luis Obispo counties. She ranks the Rio Road and Carmel Valley Road intersections in "the top ten" when it comes to delays, frustration, and complaints.

"I hesitated to even tell you about our delay study next week," she said, "because drivers cuss at us when we stand out there in our orange vests. I just try not to look up."

Realistic date

Mike Giuliano, the Caltrans engineer who is directing the project to add a second right-turn lane from Carmel Valley Road up the hill on Highway 1, told the Pine Cone that they are "aiming for a realistic date to start construction in spring 1998." But that project would only provide 2 lanes for 400 feet, and then would merge back into one lane.

He admits "It won't help much. To make the traffic flow, the two lanes would have to continue all the way to Ocean Avenue." That project is controversial, to say the least. It has a price tag of $2.6 million, would cut down up to 300 trees, and require an environmental impact report and Coastal Commission approval. "I know better than to estimate construction on that one," said Giuliano.

To many residents along Carmel's Highway One, the solution is, and has always been, a new highway across land in Hatton Canyon that was planned and paid for forty years ago next month. They feel the "crawling parking lot" in front of their homes is a terrible injustice, because they bought their homes near a "rural road" that was supposed to stay rural. They say pushing through-traffic farther away from Carmel (into Hatton Canyon) will help preserve the village character. And they believe Hatton Canyon residents are getting a free park while they pay the price, with traffic jams and frustration.

"Both Carmel Knolls and High Meadow Subdivision were developed with the full knowledge that the Hatton Canyon Freeway would be constructed in that area, and were designed to accommodate it," said Carl Hooper, the civil engineer who worked for the developers of Hatton Canyon in the old days. The building sites adjacent to the proposed freeway surely sold for a lower price, and the people presumably knew what they were buying.

Marshall Hydorn, Carmel City Councilman and the representative to the Transportation Agency of Monterey County, opposes the freeway. He says "Sometimes life isn't fair. But when this freeway land was purchased, nobody cared about open space. It we build the freeway, it won't ease congestion, it will create congestion. It will be easier for more people to get to Carmel Valley, and that will encourage more houses, more development. Then we'll all forfeit our quality of life. "

Hydorn believes that $40 million and the loss of open space in Hatton Canyon is too high a price to pay for 3 miles of freeway. He'd like to see some of that money used to buy the homes along Highway One, saying "I do feel sorry for those people."

And what about the thousands of drivers who don't live either place, but are stuck in traffic just the game? "It's getting ugly," says Pebble Beach resident Linda Gormley, who recently spent 43 minutes trying to go on an 8-mile errand to the Barnyard. "I see people giving the finger. Nobody lets you in any more. Every trip is becoming an ordeal. "

Restaurant employee not seriously injured after fall from Big Sur cliff

PINE CONE STAFF REPORT

AN EMPLOYEE of the Sierra Mar Restaurant at the Post Ranch Inn escaped serious injury last week after accidentally driving a maintenance cart over the side of a cliff.

The Inn is famous for its stunning location — some of the rooms and the Sierra Restaurant are built literally at the edge of a very steep, 1,100-foot hillside that drops away to the Pacific Ocean below. A San Francisco newspaper carried the story, reporting that an employee of the restaurant, 53-year-old Teofilo Ramirez, backed the cart over the edge of the cliff last Friday evening. He fell out of the cart and tumbled about 100 feet down the hillside. The Monterey County Sheriff's search and rescue team assisted in rescuing Ramirez, who was treated at CHOMP and released.

When contacted by the Pine Cone, the restaurant said they would have no comment, because they "didn't want to make a story out of it."

Carmel: Manager of a shopping center reported that the inside of a business and a nearby elevator had been defaced with green paint. Damage estimated at $1000.

Carmel: A woman requested a civil standby while she resolved a bounced-check problem. The subject had been verbally abusive on the phone and she feared for her safety. Her husband was able to reach a peaceful agreement with the subject.

Pebble Beach: A man reported his lawn was showing signs of discoloration and he felt someone might have used a chemical on it. He has no problems with his neighbors. The man will check with his landscaper to find out real cause.

Carmel Valley: A woman reported receiving a telephone call at her place of business from an unknown male soliciting funds for an unknown firefighters association. The subject was going to pick up a $50 check from the reporting party. The male subject never showed up for the check and the woman thought this was very suspicious. She could not provide the name of the man or the organization.

Gonzales is responsible for monitoring 300 state highway intersections in Santa Cruz, Monterey, San Benito and San Luis Obispo counties. She ranks the Rio Road and Carmel Valley Road intersections in "the top ten" when it comes to delays, frustration, and complaints.

"I hesitated to even tell you about our delay study next week," she said, "because drivers cuss at us when we stand out there in our orange vests. I just try not to look up."

Realistic date

Mike Giuliano, the Caltrans engineer who is directing the project to add a second right-turn lane from Carmel Valley Road up the hill on Highway 1, told the Pine Cone that they are "aiming for a realistic date to start construction in spring 1998." But that project would only provide 2 lanes for 400 feet, and then would merge back into one lane.

He admits "It won't help much. To make the traffic flow, the two lanes would have to continue all the way to Ocean Avenue." That project is controversial, to say the least. It has a price tag of $2.6 million, would cut down up to 300 trees, and require an environmental impact report and Coastal Commission approval. "I know better than to estimate construction on that one," said Giuliano.

To many residents along Carmel's Highway One, the solution is, and has always been, a new highway across land in Hatton Canyon that was planned and paid for forty years ago next month. They feel the "crawling parking lot" in front of their homes is a terrible injustice, because they bought their homes near a "rural road" that was supposed to stay rural. They say pushing through-traffic farther away from Carmel (into Hatton Canyon) will help preserve the village character. And they believe Hatton Canyon residents are getting a free park while they pay the price, with traffic jams and frustration.

"Both Carmel Knolls and High Meadow Subdivision were developed with the full knowledge that the Hatton Canyon Freeway would be constructed in that area, and were designed to accommodate it," said Carl Hooper, the civil engineer who worked for the developers of Hatton Canyon in the old days. The building sites adjacent to the proposed freeway surely sold for a lower price, and the people presumably knew what they were buying.

Marshall Hydorn, Carmel City Councilman and the representative to the Transportation Agency of Monterey County, opposes the freeway. He says "Sometimes life isn't fair. But when this freeway land was purchased, nobody cared about open space. It we build the freeway, it won't ease congestion, it will create congestion. It will be easier for more people to get to Carmel Valley, and that will encourage more houses, more development. Then we'll all forfeit our quality of life. "

Hydorn believes that $40 million and the loss of open space in Hatton Canyon is too high a price to pay for 3 miles of freeway. He'd like to see some of that money used to buy the homes along Highway One, saying "I do feel sorry for those people."

And what about the thousands of drivers who don't live either place, but are stuck in traffic just the game? "It's getting ugly," says Pebble Beach resident Linda Gormley, who recently spent 43 minutes trying to go on an 8-mile errand to the Barnyard. "I see people giving the finger. Nobody lets you in any more. Every trip is becoming an ordeal. "

Restaurant employee not seriously injured after fall from Big Sur cliff

PINE CONE STAFF REPORT

AN EMPLOYEE of the Sierra Mar Restaurant at the Post Ranch Inn escaped serious injury last week after accidentally driving a maintenance cart over the side of a cliff.

The Inn is famous for its stunning location — some of the rooms and the Sierra Restaurant are built literally at the edge of a very steep, 1,100-foot hillside that drops away to the Pacific Ocean below. A San Francisco newspaper carried the story, reporting that an employee of the restaurant, 53-year-old Teofilo Ramirez, backed the cart over the edge of the cliff last Friday evening. He fell out of the cart and tumbled about 100 feet down the hillside. The Monterey County Sheriff's search and rescue team assisted in rescuing Ramirez, who was treated at CHOMP and released.

When contacted by the Pine Cone, the restaurant said they would have no comment, because they "didn't want to make a story out of it."

Carmel police solve vehicle thefts, make arrests after stakeout

■ 20-year-old suspect, David Brian Dorr, raised in Carmel

By TAMARA GRIPPI

AFTER A stakeout Monday afternoon, the Carmel Police caught two suspects believed to be responsible for two stolen vehicles in town over the weekend.

Officers Mike Calhoun and Phil Nash were undercover near a Prunedale residence at 2:30 p.m. Monday when David Brian Dorr, 20 drove up in an Acura Integra, which allegedly had been stolen from Carmel Sunday night.

The suspect fled in the car, and the officers chased him on a dead-end street, where they arrested him. Shortly after, the police arrested Dorr's girlfriend, Jamie Marie Mason, who arrived on the scene in a Jeep Grand Cherokee, which allegedly had been stolen from Carmel Friday morning.

Carmel-raised

Police are investigating the possibility Dorr is responsible for numerous items stolen from cars in Carmel over the past month, including pagers, cellular phones, and compact discs.

The suspect, who grew up in Carmel, allegedly targeted unlocked cars, looking for keys left in ashtrays or glove-compartments.

On Saturday, Dorr allegedly went through fifteen vehicles and acquired two sets of keys and a cellular phone.

Both suspects have criminal records and are currently on probation, according to lieutenant William Uretsky.

During last year, Dorr was convicted of stealing property from vehicles and Mason was convicted for petty theft, Uretsky said.

Officers Nash and Calhoun were commended by the chief of police for solving eight vehicle burglaries and two auto thefts, "Both officers put in 20 hours over shift time during the weekend and handled this investigation from beginning to end," Uretsky said.

BEN

Carmel mayor from 1988 to 1992, said comparing Santa Cruz to Carmel is not really valid.

"Santa Cruz is a commercial beach and ours is not. It's more natural," said Grace. "They have places where they can store balloon-chairs and rubber ramps. Plus, that area is more densely populated, although it is a neat idea."

For Spangenberg, a solution to the issue would be a benefit for the whole community.

"I think everyone should be on the beach. Making the beach handicap-accessible would also make it more accessible for parents with strollers and the elderly."

According to Greg D'Ambrosio, Carmel assistant city administrator, the task force is looking into the matter.

"We looked at the issue back in 1984, and we're examining it right now, but it'll be a while before a decision is made," said D'Ambrosio.

Despite his handicap, Ben is also an accomplished athlete. He recently competed at the USA Southwest Junior Regionals for the Physically Challenged in table tennis and swimming held in Arizona.

And this summer he will return to Arizona to compete in the Nationals.

"It would be nice if Ben could be down on the beach," his mother said. "To live at the beach and not be on the beach is a tragedy."

Woman's fall leads to lawsuit against city

PINE CONE STAFF REPORT

A MORGAN Hill woman's visit to Carmel took a turn for the worse, and now she's suing the City of Carmel for $25,000.

Court papers filed last week on behalf of Adele Church claim that the City of Carmel was negligent and failed to properly maintain a sidewalk on Junipero between 5th and 6th Streets. Ms. Church's lawyer told the Pine Cone that last November 10th she tripped over an exposed tree root and fell down, and that as a result she was "severly injured."

Carmel City Administrator Jere Kersnar said that Carmel gets "more of this sort of thing" than most cities, especially because of all our "sidewalk trees." Carmel has a special "grinding machine," Kersnar said, to help keep the sidewalks obstacle-free.

There is no indication as to when, if ever, the case will go to trial.

FARR: Budget process could depend on outcome

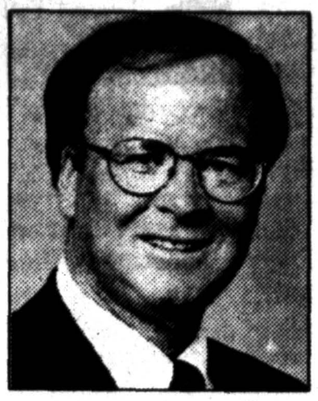
Court upholds the current legislation. "Congress will not draft a new bill as long as the partisan bickering is going on," Farr predicted.

Federal Judge Thomas Penfield Jackson, a Reagan appointee, ruled that the Act was unconstitutional because Congress "surrendered" powers that it could not legally delegate to the President.



Sam Farr

Farr believes that the Supreme Court's timing on its decision will make a difference when the budget talks begin.

"It (the line-item veto) will make the budget process much more negotiable, rather than all or nothing," Farr said.

REUSE

would be significant to get a unanimous vote," he said. "This is not Don Jordan's plan or Seaside's plan or Marina's plan. It's the Peninsula's plan. There is still a lot of work to be done and we want everyone's cooperation."

About his meeting with Koffman and White, Vocelka said, "There seems to be just a few points we need to work on."

Big dates

The FORA board is expected to deliberate and make a final vote as early as next month. The first public hearing on the two final documents is scheduled for next Thursday, April 24.

Some city officials and residents from Carmel and its neighboring cities might prefer extensive rewriting of the plan, but, by all indications, that won't happen.

"What is chilling to me is that the final reuse plan still contains the possibility of full buildout, which is much larger than simply replacing what was there under the Army," said Carmel Councilwoman Barbara Livingston.

As of the release of the final EIR and reuse plan, the Peninsula contingent of concerned city officials and residents has already won one important concession. The final plan provides for only 37,000 residents (not the original 71,000). That population figure "theoretically" could be changed with subsequent approvals and the availability of new water sources, according to FORA Executive Officer Michael Houlemard.

Marina Mayor Jim Vocelka

Some residents of Carmel and other cities, however, are not comforted by the news of this official reduction, arguing that some full build-out provisions (for the year 2045) remain in the plan.

Once the northern cities begin selling land to private developers starting next year, the city in question "is obligated to the interests of the developers," whether or not the water or road capacity exists, argued Debra Mickelson, a Carmel resident, who is active with the Fort Ord Reuse Study Group.

Marina City Manager John Longley told The Pine Cone that the concerns about "an Oklahoma land rush" are unfounded because no reuse projects will be approved without adequate provisions for infrastructure and public services.

Koffman said she is still looking to find adequate safeguards in the plan. "This plan has the potential to be in reach for us, but it is not there yet. All of us are looking for a plan that can be supported not just by a simple majority, but by a greater majority and a general support by the public."

Monterey Mayor Dan Albert agreed. "I hope in the end we can all agree, and that this will not be a 7-6, or 8-5 vote."

Weighted vote gives Carmel view little clout

IN CARMEL, Monterey and Pacific Grove, the practical reality has become clear: The weighted vote will benefit those jurisdictions that will inherit substantial portions of land from the federal government.

Consider the composition of the 13-member FORA board:

- Staunch reuse supporters Marina and Seaside each have two voting members on the FORA board.
- The tiny jurisdictions of Sand City (estimated population for 1995 of 200) and Del Rey Oaks (pop. 1,690) each have one vote on the board, giving them disproportionate representation compared to the more populous PG and Monterey, which also have one vote.
- The County of Monterey has three voting members: Dave Potter in the Fifth District, Edith Johnsen in the Fourth, and Tom Perkins in the Third.

It now appears that the greatest sales job by reuse plan supporters will have to be directed at Potter, who has expressed the most concerns about the scale of the planned reuse.

- Despite its immense population of about 122,000, Salinas, which had serious concerns about the draft EIR last year, has just one vote on the FORA board.

While no FORA representatives can be expected to say how they will vote before all of the testimony has been received, Carmel and its neighbors appear to have an uphill battle.

Public comment urged at kick-off meeting for design

By TAMARA GRIPPI

RESIDENTS WILL have the opportunity to voice their opinions about the future look of Carmel neighborhoods at a public workshop on Saturday.

The three-hour workshop will be held at the Carmel Women's Club, at the Southwest corner of Ninth and San Carlos, starting at 9:30 a.m.

In recent years, some residents have voiced concerns that new houses in town have become too large, and that many neighborhoods have assumed a uniform look.

"The houses are always proposed at the maximum floor level and maximum height," said senior planner Rick Tooker. "We need to determine if our codes and guidelines are encouraging a repetitive style."

But not everyone agrees that any changes are warranted. "Trying to dictate good design is like trying to pin down jello," one Carmel architect told the Pine Cone. "Carmel's design traditions began in an era when the government didn't tell anyone what their home should look like. The buildings that went up in those days are loved by nearly everyone. If we have fewer — not more — design rules then we will get better-designed, more tasteful homes which the city will be proud of."

A steering committee and a private consulting group will spend the next nine to 12 months making recommendations for rewriting residential design guidelines and standards. Saturday's workshop will be an opportunity for the community to participate.

"The planning commission is very enthused about receiving as much input as possible," said Yoko Whitaker, planning commission chairwoman.

Mayor Ken White agreed. "It's crucial that we get public comment at this meeting," he said. "Both the consulting group and steering committee will be listening very closely."

As an interactive workshop, Saturday's meeting will include computer modeling demonstrations. In addition, participants will look at a variety of housing pictures to identify what design aspects they like and dislike.

The public's feedback will provide the basis for the consulting group's work. "What we have in terms of design will be directed by public comment and participation throughout the process," said Nore Winter, project consultant.

A closer look at steering committee

THE STEERING committee for the Design Traditions Project has been selected and includes the following representatives:

- Marshall Hydorn (city council)
- Pope Coleman (planning commission)
- Robert Kohn (forest and beach commission)
- Francyne Laney (community and cultural commission)
- Anne Bell (historic preservation committee)
- Brian Congleton (architect)
- H.D. Newman (builder's exchange)
- Judy Lyle (association of realtors)
- The following neighborhood representatives: Bart Bartron, Olof Dahlstrand, Diane Billingsley, Earl Power and Melanie Billig.

The landscape architect slot and banking/finance slot have yet to be filled.

In addition to the Saturday workshop, upcoming events for the design traditions project include:

At noon today at Sunset Center, the steering committee will introduce themselves and select a chair and vice-chair. The consultant will provide a brief presentation.

At 2 p.m. today at Sunset Center, the steering committee will host a public meeting.

On Friday at 1 p.m. at Sunset Center, the steering committee will host a meeting with architects, designers and builders.

Duckett's Personal Fitness in CV is a family affair

By VIRGINIA PARKE

"YOU PUT one foot in that door, you're mine," says a grinning Thomas Duckett.

With a toss of her brown curly hair, Michele Duckett laughs, adding, "We love what we do."

What they do is operate the Personal Fitness clinic in Carmel Valley Village.

"Community and family are important to us. I don't think either of us would have thought we would end up in Carmel Valley when we first met," states Thomas, a 30-year physical fitness veteran.

That fateful meeting took place at a health club in Southern California 17 years ago. Michele recalls: " I would go to the club and forget my membership card. Thomas would let me in and we became friends. At that time, I had completed two college degrees, in political science and in broadcast journalism, from USC."

Born in Portland, Oregon, this petite, blue-eyed dynamo had her sights set on a career in broadcasting.

"While waiting for a break, I worked for Capitol Records in Los Angeles screening potential talent. I moonlighted teaching aerobic with Jane Fonda. I left and went with her partner, Janice Darling, becoming a master teacher for the next 10 years."

Thomas, born in San Francisco, had completed a degree in theater Arts, worked with an African dance group for five years, studied voice at the Lee Strasberg studio, developed his singing voice and received a degree in the art of theatrical make-up.

"I managed health spa facilities to pay the bills in between my artistic endeavors," he said. "I worked with Robert Ward training the 1984 Olympic Weight Lifting Team. I am certified as a personal trainer by the Chicago Fitness Association."

Enter marriage and children

Thomas recorded an album with AVI Record Co., and was on the verge of signing a contract with Columbia Records with a group called Carnival when marriage and children entered his life.

"That changed my priorities," he said. "The years of rejection in the entertainment industry were getting to me. It wasn't fun anymore."

Michele had gone on to work as a disc jockey, reporter, news anchor and producer on radio. She then went into television with NBC and Fox TV working as an assistant to the news director.

"I was still moonlighting teaching aerobics," she recalls. "I loved helping people feel good about themselves. Having Thomas, now age 11, changed my focus. We had a nanny for a year before we decided we wanted to change our lifestyle. We wanted to live in a place that was safer and more fun."

"I had come to the Central Coast area in my younger years," Thomas confides. "A friend had moved to this area, and we came to visit and ended up buying property. We decided on Carmel Valley because the school system was good and the area seemed family oriented compared to Southern California."

"We moved here and I went to work at KSBW — producing. Then Lauren, now age 8, was born," Michele recalls. "We felt that must be something we could do together that would enable us to share more time with Thomas and Lauren."

Togetherness is key

"Our combined years of working in the physical fitness field came together," recounts Thomas. "In 1992, I went down to Southern California and loaded three trucks with equipment and opened the Personal Fitness Clinic.

"Now we split the work day so one of us is available at home. This also gives me time to work in my garden, play with may antique 1947 Buick Super convertible and spend time doing community work."

Thomas is a member of the Carmel Valley Civic Improvement Committee Board of Directors. "I'm concerned about maintaining our quality of life in this community," he said.

When Michele isn't working or doing event driving duty for Thomas and Lauren, she has served in every school volunteer capacity possible. This next year she will be coaching girls' basketball and softball.

"During the snow season I love to ski," she said. "This year there has been an extra challenge — planning and getting the permits for the expansion of the Personal Fitness facility.

pleted by spring of 1998."

Nancy Watts, a longtime clinic member greets the news adding, " Thomas is a good listener."

Julie Jackson states: "Their encouragement is appreciated."

And Wally LeValley, a 6-year-member adds: "Thomas and Michele give us their personal attention. This is a wonderful place to socialize. It take the place of Rosie's Cracker Barrel for me."

Striding on the treadmill, five-year-member Allan Marcus remarks, "They provide professional attention along with personal concern."

Allison Gardner agrees: "With their help and friendship, I am now just about pain-free after back surgery."

Donna Buckholz, a four-year member states, "I was pleased that Thomas and Michele took time and motivated me to keep exercising after my leg surgery."

Member Kay Kirkland gives another perspective saying, "They take the time to make sure I'm doing everything right, then they leave me alone."

Michael and Thomas are keeping the commitment they made to "do something that contribute to our family's well-being and the well-being of our community."

Trading their "glamorous" careers for lives of service and family in Carmel Valley gives added meaning to all who put a foot in the door of the Personal Fitness Clinic.

San Clemente Dam to undergo 18-month project to improve safety

By PAUL MILLER

THE SAN Clemente Dam will get a retrofit to make it less likely to fail in an earthquake or a major flood, according to a plan announced this week by Cal-Am Water Co., which owns the dam and its upstream neighbor, the Los Padres Dam.

According to Cal-Am, the state agency that regulates dam safety has minimum standards for seismic and flood safety. The San Clemente Dam, built in 1921, is inspected every year by the state agency for dam safety, and currently does not meet those standards. Cal-Am has been ordered by the State to improve the dam's safety.

Cal-Am General Manager Larry Foy says the retrofit project will not increase the capacity of the San Clemente reservoir. Cal-Am is proposing a new dam upriver, the so-called "No-Growth Dam," to alleviate the Peninsula's long-term water shortage.

According to Cal-Am engineer Marc Lucca, the State of California requires that all dams be engineered to withstand a "maximum credible earthquake" for each individual dam site. For the San Clemente Dam, this will mean thickening the existing dam by nine feet at the base, and tapering up to an increase of almost five feet of thickness at the top, Lucca said.

Also, the ancient structure of gates and concrete piers that presently exists along the top of the dam will be completely removed, and replaced with a more efficient spillway superstructure. The purpose, Lucca said, is to increase the carrying capacity of the spillway so that the dam will be much less likely to be "overtopped," even during very severe rainfall.

A third component of the project is to reinforce the dam's abutments. Erosion of the canyon walls during heavy rains will then not threaten the dam's integrity, Lucca said.

Current access to the dam is through the exclusive Carmel Valley community of "Sleepy Hollow." For the retrofit project, a temporary road and a temporary bridge over the Carmel River will be built connecting the retrofit site directly to Carmel Valley Road, Cal-Am said.

Work on the dam will be underway for about one-and-a-half years.

Sanctuary official says oil tankers pose biggest threat

By TAMARA GRIPPI

KARIN STRASSER Kauffman, chairwoman of the Monterey Marine sanctuary's Advisory Council, warned that the biggest danger facing sea otters and other marine life is oil tankers traveling through the 360-mile-long sanctuary.

"Until we deal with vessel safety, we can't say the sea otters are safe," she told an audience at the Pacific Grove Museum of Natural History earlier this month.

Often the oil tankers take the shortest, most direct routes, which also can be full of rocks and sea life, making for a potential oil spill.

"It's like giving all of us a driver's license and saying you can go anywhere you want. There are no roads, no intersections," Strasser Kauffman said.

She explained that additional traffic approaches to San Francisco are necessary, and ultimately the sanctuary should be an area to be avoided by tanker traffic.

Last November, a sunken oil tanker was discovered just a mile south of the sanctuary's southern border. When the tanker was torpedoed by a Japanese submarine in 1941, it contained 3 million gallons of oil.

The Sanctuary hasn't done anything about the 440-foot-long tanker yet, and is still considering the best way to protect the ocean if in fact the tanker still contains oil.

First step

The establishment of the sanctuary in 1992 improved conditions for the sea life in many ways, most significantly by banning off-shore oil drilling within the sanctuary.

"The founding push for the sanctuary was off-shore oil drilling," said John Robinson, public relations coordinator for the sanctuary, speaking after the talk.

Establishment of the sanctuary concluded a frustrating struggle for Strasser Kauffman, a former supervisor, who had returned year after year to testify before a Senate committee to ensure that a moratorium on oil-lease sales would continue.

Sea otters are currently protected as an endangered species. But it's the sanctuary, which stretches from San Simeon to just outside San Francisco, that protects the sea otters' habitat.

Karin Strasser Kauffman

"We need to have a clean environment and the right amount of plant life," Strasser Kauffman explained. "Kelp for the sea life needs to be maintained just like our forests."

The sanctuary also protects the marine mammals from "harassment" in the form of jet skis, underwater dredging of the sea floor and airplane flights lower than 100 feet.

The Watchdog

As a federal agency, The Monterey Bay National Marine Sanctuary manages and enforces the protected area.

The agency often depends upon the watchdog efforts of the advisory council.

Two years ago, the sanctuary learned about "shark chumming," a practice in which divers were lowered into the ocean in steel cages while sharks were attracted with 'chum,' a bloody concoction of fish

Supervisors Simon Salinas, Tom Perkins, Judy Pennycook and Edith Johnsen were brief in their comments as they cast votes in favor of the plan and against requiring an environmental impact report (EIR), which opponents of the Casa Palmero conversion urged.

There was a consensus among the four that the Casa Palmero project followed the county zoning regulations and presented minimal traffic impacts. A key moment arrived toward the end of the hearing when Johnsen asked the traffic consultant for the project, Robert Rees, of Fehr & Peers Associates, Inc., whether the traffic impacts would be significant.

Rees said there would be an increase in the number of cars turning left off of 17 Mile Drive onto Palmero Way at peak commuting times, but the rate of left turns would be no more than about one vehicle per minute..

Johnsen and Pennycook expressed satisfaction that 100 employee parking spaces would be directed underground instead of along 17 Mile Drive at Peter Hay Hill.

Many Pebble Beach residents who testified against the project did so especially on the grounds of increased traffic, as well as "creeping commercialism" within the forest, to use forest resident Ray Freschi's term.

Supporters of the project were also there in force, arguing, for starters, that the parking structure will put more cars underground and that the conversion will be unobtrusive to neighbors.

"The more cars you can hide in Pebble Beach, the better," said Pebble Beach resident Paul Woudenberg.

Opponent Jody Bunn presented a petition of 739 project foes. "We will lose our neighborhood and become a commercial zone."

Eighteen people spoke for the project, 14 in opposition.

Meanwhile, as a lone voice, Potter made clear his disenchantment with the Pebble Beach Co.'s line of reasoning — that the spa and inn were needed to stay competitive into the next century.

"We need to make sure the neighborhood is preserved," Potter said. "I don't believe we should keep commercializing to stay competitive. I don't believe the answer is to grow indefinitely."

But Mark Stilwell, Executive Vice President of the Pebble Beach Company sees things differently. "One thing I really want to emphasize," Stilwell told the Pine Cone, "is that we worked hard with the community, especially the neighbors most impacted by the project, to get their input. And as a result of that input we have a very good project."

"The Sandwich Generation" describes those who help support elderly parents as well as grown children. A survey of such people, age 40 to 64 with incomes over $50,000, reveals shortcomings in financial planning. Only one in three, for example, connected gifts to children with tax savings. fewer than 50 percent consulted financial planners for advise on how to maximize the help they give their children and parents.

Most of the dancers, singers and comics are in their 60s and 70s and as trim as they are talented. "We're showing people that it's absolutely not over at 60," said manager Riff Markowitz. One review hailed the performers for proving that vitality and sex appeal don't necessarily fade with youth.

and animal parts.

"The sharks were being trained to consider the humans as bait," Strasser Kauffman said.

The advisory council's research panel put together reports which were instrumental in helping federal agencies draft legislation to put a stop to the practice late last year.

Strasser Kauffman is pleased with the example that her advisory council, the first in the nation, has set for other emerging councils nationally.

"The work of the sanctuary council is invaluable," said Robinson. "They are able to access some of the real experts in the field."

The sanctuary itself maintains staff as well as boats equipped with radio equipment. But operating on a total budget of under $1 million, enforcement depends mostly upon the work of other federal agencies.

"We would like to increase our enforcement presence," Robinson said.

Other Threats

One by one, the sanctuary wants to eliminate all the threats facing the sea otters and other marine life.

The next major project on the sanctuary's agenda is coordinating various water quality programs. "Currently there are 99 different clean-water programs and 27 different agencies in the central California region," Strasser Kaufman said. "There's a crying need for coordination."

"We want to bring agencies together to find the best solutions for problems out there," said Robinson.

New water legislation is under consideration at both the state and federal levels. Locally, residents can also make an impact simply by watching their habits. "Be careful of what you put down storm drains," Strasser Kauffman said. Any toxic fluid, including fertilizer or oil, will eventually find its way to the ocean, she noted.

The dumping of toxic waste in the ocean is another major concern for the sanctuary. Strasser Kauffman talked about a proposed "recycling" project to dump toxic waste water into a small unprotected area inside the sanctuary in the San Francisco Bay.

The council will voice its opposition to this project, but Strasser Kauffman reminded the public of its obligation to the marine life within the Monterey Bay.

"The last remaining threat is complacency," Strasser Kauffman said. She referred to a recent proposal by the Marine Fishery Service to move the sea otter off the endangered species list. In the face of the current dangers, such a move would be premature, she argued.

"We have a submarine canyon that's unique worldwide," she said. "We need to make sure we're good stewards."

THE NATIONAL Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration has announced the appointment of Carol Fairfield to the newly created superintendent post of the Monterey Bay National Marine Sanctuary.

The marine biologist and federal fisheries analyst will become the sanctuary's top on-site official, overseeing the management of the day-to-day operations, policy implementation and public outreach.

Fairfield is currently the Protected Resources Specialist for NOAA's National Marine Fisheries Service in Silver Springs, M.D.

Stainbrook selected new Carmel football coach

■ Former QB gets nod

By SCOTT A. BROWN
Pine Cone Sports Editor

FORMER CARMEL High star quarterback David Stainbrook has been selected to coach the school's varsity football squad during its 1997 campaign, CHS principal Eric Paulson told The Pine Cone Tuesday.

Stainbrook, who graduated from Carmel High in 1987 and went on to play football at Fresno State and Cal Poly-San Luis Obispo, was the offensive coordinator during the entirety of Mike Kelly's two year stint at the head of the CHS varsity program. The Padres posted a combined 6-14 record under Kelly, who resigned from his post soon after Carmel's season-ending loss to Pacific Grove.

Stainbrook, who received his teaching credential from Chapman College, teaches Recreational Therapy and physical education at CHS, thus fulfilling the school's goal of hiring an on-campus figure to lead their football program. Stainbrook, 28, also coaches the girls varsity basketball team and junior varsity baseball team.

"I think its great," said Kelly, who runs MBK Insurance Services in Carmel. "As I was going through this past season and thinking it would be my last, I was hoping the new guy would be Dave. He's around the school on a full-time basis, which is what they need."

"I'm thrilled," said Stainbrook. "As a player and a coach, I've come to recognize that while our numbers are always low (in terms of players on the team), Carmel players always give 120 percent because they have to. Year in and year out, I'll put our 25 players against a school with 60 because they always seem to have a heart for the game.

"The biggest thing I have in terms of goals is to build an actual football program where there's continuity between the junior varsity and varsity teams. I'd also like to continue the theme that Mike established of having exciting teams on the football field. Even though the wins were few, we were always exciting to watch."

Dave Stainbrook (sunglasses) has spent three years looking over the shoulder of Mike Kelly

"Personally, I'm delighted with the selection," said Paulson. "In addition to being a fine, fine coach, David was someone from within the school who expressed serious interest in the position. He echoed the sentiments of the administration that we'd like to build a program, where from JV to varsity there are three or four guys at each position so that in a couple of years we have a redesigned team to be reckoned with."

Paulson did not identify other applicants for the position, but did indicate that there were several.

Stainbrook spent 1994 with the junior varsity football team at Carmel High and 1995-96 with the varsity—all as offensive coordinator under Kelly. Additionally, he quarterbacked the Padres to a 3-7 record in 1986 and a 7-3 mark in 1987. Stainbrook was selected to the Carmel High School Dream Team in The Pine Cone's September 5, 1996, Football Preview Issue.

Stainbrook stated that he believes it was his tutelage under the likes of Rich Olsén at Fresno State and Lyle Setencich at Cal Poly that differentiated him from other candidates. Olsen is now the offensive coordinator for the Seattle Seahawks, and Setencich is the defensive coordinator at UC-Berkeley.

"You don't get better coaching than those two guys," said Stainbrook.

Stainbrook underwent a three-interview procedure en route to obtaining the Carmel High job. He was first screened by a committee consisting of parents, students and faculty. His second interview was several weeks later with Paulson. Finally, he and Paulson met with school superintendent Joe Jacconette last week to crystallize Stainbrook's selection.

"(The interviewers) emphasized my philosophy on coaching in general, not just football," said Stainbrook. "I told them that my strength as a coach is my fairness. I don't consider one kid different from another. I treat them all the same, no matter if they're a scrub or a star."

There are few expectations as far as winning goes for next year's Padres squad. After graduating nearly 75 percent of its starting lineup, veteran stalwarts will be few and far between. Carmel will return running back JoJo Grewell and defensive back/wide receiver Chris Paquin, as well as defensive lineman Joey Macaluso. Frankie Ringer, who started at center for the Padres last year, heads into the 1997 as the team's starting quarterback.

Stainbrook received his teaching credential in 1995 and did his student teaching at King Middle School in Seaside. His wife, Corey, also teaches at Carmel High. They have a son, Troy, who is six months old.

Shepner and Cardenas are invaluable up the middle

By PATRICK FOUDY
Pine Cone Correspondent
and SCOTT A. BROWN
Pine Cone Sports Editor

IT HAS been said that a baseball team must be strong up the middle for it to be successul. If that is the case, the Carmel Padres are indeed Herculean with their double-play combination of seniors Robbie Shepner and Nachi Cardenas. Both have four years of varsity experience and have thus far led the Padres to a 3-2 record in the Mission Trail Athletic League with their play both afield and at the plate.

Cardenas, the shortstop, and Shepner, the second baseman, would have a hard time surpassing their halcyon season of 1996. They both hit better than .400 last year and finished first and second on their team respectively in runs batted in en route to the Padres' 29-2 record and Central Coast Section championship. Both were all-league selections (Shepner as a center fielder), and Cardenas was the MTAL's MVP and an all-state selection.

"It's been a great experience to coach the two," said baseball coach Mike Kelly, who also directed Cardenas and Shepner on the varsity football team. "They're both hard workers who get the most out of their abilities, which is the hardest part about coaching."

With a lingering shoulder injury from football, Shepner has made the transition to second base from the outfield to accomodate for a shorter throw. "I think it's a terrific position for him. He has the quickest hands on the team," said Kelly.

"My goal is to help the team win by providing strong defense and the same level of offense I did last year," said Shepner. Shepner led the Padres in home runs and stolen bases in 1996. Through 17 games this season, he again leads the team with three home runs and 19 stolen bases. He is hitting .404 with nine extra-base hits.

On the final day of a tournament held March 27-29 in Las Vegas, Shepner went 7-for-7 over two games with a grand slam, a solo home run, a triple, a double, and three singles.

"(Shepner is) remarkable for not having played the position before," said Cardenas, who teamed up with current catcher Brian Stream last year to form the team's double-play combination.

Cardenas continues to be the axis round which the Padres revolve. Possessing the smoothest glove and best range perhaps ever seen at short in the school's history, Cardenas is also a force at the plate. He leads the squad with a .472 batting average and 13 extra-base hits. He is 5-for-5 in stolen base attempts.

"My goal heading into the season was to play consistently," said Cardenas. "I think we all entered the season a little bit cocky, but now we know we have to come into each game prepared to compete."

Anderson leads Padres past RLS

By SCOTT A. BROWN

THE RAPIDLY ascending Carmel Padres received their most competitive pitching performance to date from Golden Anderson en route to an important 10-2 intraleague victory over Robert Louis Stevenson Monday.

Despite surrendering nine walks, Anderson gutted up and pitched out of jams in all but one of the five and two-thirds innings he threw. He struck out Pirate batters with the bases loaded in the third and fifth innings.

Freshman sensation Jesse Kovacs retired two consecutive batters with two men aboard and two outs in the sixth inning with Carmel clinging to a 7-2 lead. Sophomore Jon Lyon finished the seventh inning for Carmel. The trio combined to strand 12 Pirate runners on base.

The Padres are 3-2 in league play, while the Pirates are 2-3.

Carmel managed to score early and often against Stevenson's Joey Baker, who many consider to be the top pitcher in the Mission Trail Athletic League. Baker has been sought after by many Division I colleges, including Berkeley, University of San Francisco, and Santa Clara.

Yet right fielder Colter Bissell homered and doubled off the outfield wall against the star right-hander. Matt Williams, who is best known as a talented pitcher for the Padres, provided the game's most exciting moment with a three-run bomb to left- center to extend his team's lead to eight runs.

"Best ever" Pirate girls track narrowly edges Padres, PG

By JON BENNER
Pine Cone Correspondent

ALTHOUGH THE Robert Louis Stevenson girls track team has just two meets under its belt, the girls team has already been lauded by coach Willie Suber as "the best Pirate track team ever assembled."

In a meet held April 9, the girls narrowly edged Carmel by a score of 66-64 (Pacific Grove, the third competitor in the meet, tallied 23 points). Tori Respass-Parsons won the 100-meter dash with a time of 12.6 seconds. Bianca Sams won the 220-yard dash with a time of 28.4 seconds. Jobbie Gaskin took first in the 440-yard sprint with a time of 67.3 seconds. Stacy Chiang won the 330-yard low hurdles in 55.7 seconds.

Stevenson's Jessica Morris placed first in the mile with a time of 5:49:4.

Sams should be the linchpin in the Pirates efforts to take the Mission Trail Athletic League championship, according to Suber. Sams was last year's league champ in the 100 meters and 220-yard dashes. If she repeats that feat, she will be the first ever to duplicate the double championship in league history.

Aneesa Moheyuddin claimed first in the high jump with a leap of 4 feet, 6 inches. She also claimed third place in the long jump and the triple jump. Amando Vicenio won the shot putt and the discus events with tosses of 28 feet, 10.5 inches, and 85 feet, 2 inches, respectively.

Two wins make Carmel tennis 7-1

By TREVOR FOGG
Pine Cone Correspondent

THE CARMEL High boys tennis team continues to roll, moving out to a 7-1 record with victories over Gonzales and York this past week by scores of 7-0 and 4-3, respectively.

Against Gonzales April 11, all five singles players—Erik Yee, Kueyson Yee, David Bednarik, Erik Bensberg and Jake Butts—won their matches. The doubles teams of Cody Reese and Marcos Ortega and Guru Khalsa and Jean-Paul Hill also were victorious.

Against York April 9, the top-ranked doubles team of Reese and Chris Martell continued to dominate, winning their match to remain unbeaten in Mission Trail Athletic League competition. The Killer B's—Bednarik, Bensberg and Butts—tallied wins to round out the Padre attack.

Where The Pine Cone's money will go — and yours should

ONE OF the stories we'll be covering extensively in the months ahead is the future of Carmel's business district.

The controversy's been raging for years . . . are chain stores taking over? How many T-shirts for sale are too many? What is the proper role of government in helping locally owned businesses thrive in an atmosphere of big-money competition?

Last week, Mark Waldroup, whose family owns and manages the much-admired Barnyard shopping center at the mouth of the valley, said that the issue is much bigger than many realize.

"There's been nothing less than a seismic shift in the face of local retail," Waldroup said. The shift, he said, is that "shopping is being redefined purely in terms of price." In other words, many people (even Carmelites!) are deciding where to shop and what to buy based purely on the price of the desired object. Personal service, selection, and location of the business — all once greatly valued by consumers — have fallen behind when shopping decisions are made.

So next time the city council or the board of supervisors is grappling with the future of our cherished local shopping areas, before you write a letter to the editor demanding that a law be passed or a zoning ordinance be made more strict, ask yourself if there's something about your own shopping habits that could be encouraging or creating a trend which you deplore.

We believe that all of you, the readers of the Pine Cone, should think about your role in this trend, and what your own personal shopping habits can mean to the community you love and would like to see preserved.

For example, if you need some tools, or a barbecue, or a small kitchen appliance, do you buy them at Brinton's? Or do you make the trek up the highway to one of the giant retailers in Sand City?

Running shoes on your shopping list? Do you buy them at the Treadmill, or do you go to a big store that is out-of-town?

Do you get your groceries at Bruno's Market & Deli or Nielsen Brothers Market?

Need a camera? Do you buy it at Carmel Camera Center?

Jewelry? How about Kocek's on San Carlos Street?

The list could go on and on. The point is that the cumulative shopping habits of thousand of people are what drive the retail marketplace to wherever it goes. Simple economic theory teaches that the supply of goods and services will constantly modify itself to meet the everyday demands of consumers. That means You.

So next time the city council or the board of supervisors is grappling with the future of our cherished local shopping areas, before you write a letter to the editor demanding that a law be passed or a zoning ordinance be made more strict, ask yourself if there's something about your own shopping habits that could be encouraging or creating a trend which you deplore.

The Pine Cone has new owners, and we also have a new policy. Whenever we need anything, be it paper clips or a set of new-generation digital cameras, we will shop locally whenever possible.

Stop and remind yourself that you should be doing the same. A footnote: After this paper — the first under new owners — is sent to the printers, we'll be having a little champagne party in the Pine Cone newsroom to celebrate.

We'll get the wine and other goodies from Ron's Liquors on Fifth Street.

Livingston on Commission

Dear Editor:

It was heart-rending that the Carmel Planning Commission could not make a decision at their April 9 meeting about how to allow the Carmel Foundation to use the house that it owns on Dolores at Eighth Street.

It is sad that procrastination, not action, won the day.

Consider the following:

■ The Foundation house (residential property near the main Foundation building) was not going to be enlarged, just renovated.

■ The membership is not growing, but more comfortable space is needed.

■ The house on Eighth Street is contiguous to the Foundation and the American Red Cross, Adobe Inn and a newly opened mortgage and title company across the street.

■ The Foundation has more than 1,000 members who live in Carmel, and the majority of the other 3,000 members who live in Carmel's "sphere of influence" walk to the foundation.

■ The foundation is not political in any way and does not solicit funds from locals. It has its own source of financial support.

■ A full meal at lunch is served four times a week at a minimal cost.

■ Members are 55 or older. For many, it is a place of friendship and companionship, especially for single members.

Carmel is a small town. Why does our planning commission not act to accommodate our most resident-serving, nonpolitical organization?

If any organization in Carmel could be trusted, the Foundation with 47 years of service to the community seems like a good choice.

Yes, the commission had the power to act, details could follow and be handled by the staff. Why did the commission procrastinate? Who are they protecting us from?

Councilwoman didn't appear to be listening to supporters of arts fest

By MARK LAUREN

I ATTENDED the April 1 Carmel City Council meeting to see for myself what Carmel Performing Arts Festival organizers had to say publicly.

I was pleased to hear what good faith the festival planners showed in limiting the festival plans according to concerns expressed by city residents.

I was particularly interested to learn that the changes in their plans are actually a courtesy to city council and residents, because, despite recent newspaper accounts, the council actually has no real jurisdiction over this festival's plans.

I am, however, pleased the festival received the majority of conceptual support from the council and the people who were in attendance at that meeting.

Fact and fiction

It must be difficult to serve as a councilperson and try to weed out fact from fiction and still serve the people who voted you into office.

I was, however, particularly amazed at Councilwoman Barbara Livingston's flagrant disrespect for the revised plans presented by festival supporters and her own staff people.

(The city staff report was clear and offered no concerns about the current festival plans.)

Both Livingston and I were in the same room that day, but she seemed to be hearing and seeing a different meeting. Questions were asked and answered plainly and coherently by festival planners, but she seemed to feel the need to publicly reinforce, if not inaccurate repetition of misleading information, at least an active mistrust, rather than hear and assess an honest clarification of intentions.

During the open-microphone session, Livingston must have missed several business people (not to mention a couple of "regular citizens") who spoke of the positive aspects of this festival.

One of those speakers turned to me and said, "I guess I don't exist," and shrugged in amazement when the councilwoman, during her closing statement, made an assertion that no business people were in favor of this festival.

Livingston reported she had heard 100 percent negative comments from residents prior to the April 1 meeting.

I know she received at least one phone call from a resident (not from me) who was extremely positive about the festival, and further that there were at least two letters at the council chambers expressing positive feelings about the festival.

Since Councilwoman Livingston is, as she claims, a valued supporter of the arts, it seems to me that she ought to take the time to help inform her constituency about what the Carmel Performing Arts Festival does plan to be, rather than support rumor and public display of fear of something that it doesn't plan to represent.

Hard-hitting legislation to make California streets safer

By TOM J. BORDONARO, JR.

ONE OF the most important requirements of a civilized society that government can fill is that of protecting its citizens from criminals, in order that our liberty would be secured. Criminals must be imprisoned, for rehabilitation, if possible, and for punishment that fits the crime.

Californians have spoken at the ballot box about their desire that certain criminals should never again threaten our security. They overwhelmingly approved the "three strikes, you're out" initiative that locks criminals away for life after they have committed three violent or serious felonies. And the crime rate has dropped dramatically in the state as a result.

Now legislators in the California Assembly are tackling another serious threat to our tranquility, security and our very liberty: the use of guns in the commission of crimes. I have introduced Assembly Bill 4, the "10/20/Life" bill that would automatically increase criminal penalties for specialized felonies in which a firearm is used.

My bill provides that any person who is charged as a principal in the commission of an offense and who is armed with or uses a firearm during the commission of certain felonies, shall be punished by an additional term of 10 years in the state prison, to be imposed consecutive to the punishment prescribed for the felony.

This bill would provide penalties so severe that one would be absolutely devoid of the capability of rational thought to use a firearm to commit a crime.

If the firearm is discharged under those circumstances, the person would be punished by an additional term of 20 years in the state prison.

And, finally, if anyone was injured as a result of the firearm being discharged under those circumstances, the person would be punished by an additional term of 25 years to life in the state prison.

California's political leaders, both Republicans and Democrats, can help to rid our communities and neighborhoods of the thugs who terrorize our children by implementing 10/20/LIFE as law. There is no better way to make safe our high-crime urban areas than to remove those who make them unsafe.

This bill would provide penalties so severe that one would be absolutely devoid of the capability of rational thought to use a firearm to commit a crime. Further, 10/20/LIFE neither impinges on the rights of any law-abiding citizen to own a gun, nor does it place undue restrictions on the lawful use of firearms.

The opponents of 10/20/LIFE are using the same tired arguments they used against "Three Strikes." They say it is too expensive to incarcerate felons. They argue that the money spent on incarceration would be better spent on social programs designed to steer criminals toward a productive life.

Some social scientists say California should instead spend the money to provide "opportunity" and to "instill values" because such prevention programs are the only way to prevent crime.

Wrong. People who arm themselves and terrorize our communities have plenty of values — all bad. By the time they get to the point in life where they would violate 10/20/LIFE, it is too late to teach them "manner." And they must be deterred from committing additional crimes by locking them away from honest people.

Tom Bordonaro

One responsibility of the legislature is to budget enough money to California's prison system so that society can be protected from sociopathic thugs. In my mind, this is less discretionary than most of the state budget.

I do not retreat from my responsibility to support laws that will make California a place where families can enjoy security in their homes, neighborhoods and communities.

California has always been a land of hopes and dreams. To keep alive our vision for California, we must keep our children safe. Assembly Bill 4 — 10/20/LIFE — will help accomplish that goal.

■ Assemblyman Tom J. Bordonaro, Jr., R-Paso Robles, represents California's 33rd District (San Luis Obispo County and northern Santa Barbara County). The 1977 graduate of Carmel High School was reelected to his seat in November with 61 percent of the vote.

Planning commission considers options for Carmel Foundation

By TAMARA GRIPPI

THE CARMEL Foundation may have to wait a little longer before it can realize its dream of expanding into a house on the southwest corner of Dolores and Eighth.

The Carmel Planning Commission must hammer out some tricky zoning matters and possibly an extended environmental review before the organization catering to seniors can begin its project.

The foundation, which is a community organization that provides programs and services for seniors, has asked that its current buildings on Lincoln and the adjacent property on Dolores be zoned as "A3" — a special older adult zone. It hopes to have the option of moving its overflowing operations into the next-door house it has used as rental property.

The A3 zone was created specifically for the foundation's Lincoln street properties in 1973 by an initiative overwhelmingly approved by voters..

During the 1980's, when the city adopted a new general plan for the city, the foundation's A3 zone was lost in the process and the property was identified as "R1" (residential) in the general plan.

No one is sure if that change in zoning was an oversight or a deliberate decision by former policy makers. In any case, the foundation has continued its programs over the years without problems — until now.

The Carmel Foundation reports that it is "bursting at the seams," needing additional space for its bustling programs.

City leaders and residents agree that the nonprofit organization should be granted the space it needs to continue its community programs. The planning commission simply needs to determine the best way to accommodate the foundation and to provide adequate safeguards for any future expansion.

Two major issues of concern are:

- Parking in the surrounding neighborhood.
- Bus access to the facility.

If an environmental impact report is required, the study period could last months. If an initial study determines none is needed, the process will go more quickly.

A lengthy solution

Planning Commissioners agreed that the R1 zone is too limiting for the Carmel Foundation's purposes, while the A3 zone, as it was originally written, leaves out the necessary guidelines for future expansion.

The solution may be a specific plan designed to control the property entirely. "A specific plan would allow for future planning for the foundation rather than responding incrementally on a year-by-year basis," said Brian Roseth, planning director.

The foundation insists that it has no plans to increase its activities, but only wishes to provide more space for its existing programs.

However, the aging baby-boomer population is likely to make more demands on the organization in the future, warranting a specific plan, according to Roseth.

A specific plan will mean more time and money for the foundation. In the past, specific plans have taken between six months and a year, according to Roseth. In addition, the foundation will have to bring in a private consultant to manage the specific plan.

To the foundation, the future is not so important as its present needs. "There's an urgency for the Carmel Foundation to take control of this house," Mel Kline, a member, said at the meeting. "Give the foundation a chance to do something now."

MONTEREY BOOK FESTIVAL DRAWS HONORED AUTHORS

By MARGOT PETIT NICHOLS

LOCAL AUTHORS known internationally, Monterey Peninsula independent booksellers and antiquarians, and California and New York publishers will converge Sunday for the first Monterey Bay Book Festival.

The bibliophilic event will be held from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. in the Monterey Room at the Monterey County Fairgrounds.

The festival celebrates Independent Bookstore Week (April 19-27) with book signings by Pulitzer Prize-winning author Jane Smiley, and celebrated children's author Beverly Cleary, both of Carmel Valley.

Other Monterey Peninsula authors who will be on hand to sign their 1997 released books include Robert Campbell, Jeff Greenwald, Michael Allen, Dianne Day, Robin White, Carol Shields, Marilyn Barrett, Linda Smith, Jennifer Louden, Jane Trittipo, Ginna Bragg, Susan Woolridge, Susan Elya, Karen Alarcon, Bobi Martin, Aaron Shepard, Peggy Downes, Patricia Faul, Virginia Mudd, Ilene Tuttle, Fred Shoemaker, Pete Cutino, Thomas Hawley, Larry Wilde, Paul Fleischman, Shirley Holt, Val Davis, Leslie Tryon, Shelley Aliotti, David Anderson and Marianne Riedman.

Additional features of the festival are exhibit booths of peninsula independent booksellers with both new, used and antiquarian books; publisher exhibit booths; a children's book and activity area with storytellers and life-size children's book characters; a computer books booth; the County Bookmobile and music by local school groups.

In the name of literacy

The purpose of the festival is to promote literacy and the love of reading, as well as to celebrate the role of independent booksellers in the community. Proceeds will benefit Reading is Fundamental (RIF), the nation's oldest and largest nonprofit children's literacy organization.

The RIF project of the Monterey Peninsula was founded and sponsored by the Kiwanis Club of Monterey more than four years ago, and serves approximately 700 children at three elementary schools. This year, the Delta Lambda chapter of Delta Kappa Gamma, an organization of women educators, took on coordination of the RIF project in Monterey.

The festival's sponsoring organization is the Monterey Bay Independent Booksellers (MBIB) which was formed in 1996 by local independent booksellers May Waldroup of Thunderbird Bookshop, Carmel; Anne Congleton of Bay Books, Monterey; Ann Ostenso of Mulberry Bookshop, Pacific Grove; Marcia Sterns of Bookmark, Pacific Grove; and Kathy Palermo of Bookworks, Pacific Grove.

Concerned with the nationwide closing of many independent community bookstores due to the proliferation of large chain stores, members decided to pool their efforts to strengthen their community base, and to support the efforts of the local RIF chapter.

Also scheduled for Independent Bookstore Week is an authors' reception from 6 to 8 p.m. Friday at Old Whaling Station, 391 Decatur St., Heritage Harbor, Monterey. Local authors will be honored and the winner of the recent MBIB Short Story Contest will be announced.

The program is sponsored by the Carmel Unified School District Music Boosters and the Carmel Mission Kiwanis Club.

COVER STORY

HUNDREDS OF WILDFLOWERS BLOOM AT MUSEUM

By BETH PENNEY

THE PACIFIC GROVE Museum of Natural History teams up with the Monterey Bay Chapter of the California Native Plant Society to bring the 36th Annual Wildflower Show to Pacific Grove beginning Friday.

For three days, amateur and professional botanists, as well as those who just like flowers, will be able to see more than 600 species and varieties of Central California's wildflowers collected, sorted, labeled and displayed by volunteers from the California Native Plant Society.

This ephemeral collection — even though cut, trimmed and sealed by dipping the stems in hot water, the delicate plants do not last more than three days at most — has been labeled with the plants' scientific names and includes common plants as well as rare and endangered species. It includes native grasses as well as wildflowers, most of which are in bloom at this time of year.

"These plants are collected on-the-spot before the show," said Museum Assistant Bernie Ferrera. "The team that goes out makes a huge, intensive effort to collect specimens. For them, it is a labor of love."

The members of the Society who volunteer to put the show together know where most of the flowers reappear each spring, Ferrera said, but due to Nature's wiles, "sometimes things pop up where they don't expect them. There are surprises in the show all the time."

Some members, Ferrera explained, have been able to plant rare and endangered wild flower species at home, and specimens from those plants are included in the show. Members also donate time to put together the labels for the exhibits.

"The show appeals to both amateur and professional botanists," Ferrera said, as well as to photographers, who may not necessarily be interested in the botany lessons afforded by the exhibit but who come to photograph the flowers' beauty.

"The flowers are displayed in glass vases and containers, in our biggest exhibit hall. It really makes it an attraction for photographers," Ferrera said.

"You can see the excitement, even from the amateurs," Ferrera said of the show. "When you walk in the door, you are hit with this wonderful smell," and the attraction builds from there.

In addition to the live plants, Brother Eric Vogel, F.S.C. of St. Mary's College of California, will demonstrate a computer CD-ROM of more than 2,000 photographs of native California flowers. The photos are taken from a collection of 13,000 slides that belonged to Brother Alfred Brosseau, a wildflower aficionado who died in 1988. The CD-ROM will be demonstrated and will also be for sale during the show.

The museum, located at the corner of Forest and Central avenues in Pacific Grove, is open from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Friday, Saturday and Sunday. Admission to the museum is normally free, but, Ferrera said, "this is the only event where we ask $1 at the door to defray expenses."

About those receptions: Let's be honest, we go for the eats

Apron Strings

By Deborah Smith

BACK IN THIRD GRADE at Greenvale School on Long Island, Miss Brower — my seemingly ancient teacher who undoubtedly was even older that my mother — taught me a very valuable lesson. When the fourth graders performed at an assembly she instructed us to compliment them on the fine job that they had done. Then the following year we were in turn congratulated by our younger school chums from Miss Brower's class.

How good it feels to have someone take the time with a compliment, especially on a creative endeavor.

Here on the peninsula we are living among some of the most renowned creative people in the world. Musicians, actors, writers, painters, cartoonists and photographers have been flocking here for years. And us regular Joes can congratulate them on their latest creative expressions by attending their openings.

Openings are big social events here in our area. Some are advertised in the newspaper as open to the public while others are more elite, requiring a formal invitation. Attending an opening, I've noticed, dictates a certain dress code. Ethnic is in. Flowing scarves, decorated vests accented with amber necklaces and turquoise along with anything grandma owned is hot.

In regard to dressing up, the most fun opening I attended recently was on a Sunday afternoon last month. Held at Monterey Billiards on Washington Street, it honored photographers Jeanne Templeton, Helene Constant, Robin Rosenzweig and Kira Corser, whose work represents the 1920s Paris-based surrealism art movement. The invitation read "Bring your shadow! Leave reason at home! Surrealism is not art, it is life!"

The general attire of the party was delicious — kind of Mardi Gras/Halloween in theme and all I can report to you is that dressed in blue and black plaid flannel pajama bottoms and a tail coat with owl feathers in my hair, I was rather demur and definitely underdressed.

Hors d' oeuvres have a glory period

But choice of attire is only one aspect of attending an opening. Along with showing appreciation for the artist's creation, let's be honest, we go for the eats. Each hors d' oeuvres seems to have a glory period, a certain season before it fades. A juicy new tidbit makes an appearance at one opening and like wildfire ricochets throughout the whole circuit. This year's spotlighted item appears to be tortilla roll-ups that I first came across a year and a half ago at the Center for Photographic Art. Inquiring, I met Teri Forsythe, who called them Swirlies. Her recipe appears here as she gave it to me.

Sorely lacking, foodwise

Some of the openings that I have attended, however, foodwise are sorely lacking. Cole Weston's magnificent show which hangs at the Highlands Inn Gallery through June 30 featured a menu that included mountains of cubed American cheese reminiscent of the '60s and bowls of olives with pits — where do you tactfully tuck a pit at an opening?

Otherwise the food was OK: trayed munchies were passed and the wine was served in stemmed glassware. (Most openings serve their wine in easy-to-knock-over plastic). But most importantly, simply everyone who was anyone in the local photography world was there. And Cole's wife, Paulette, curator of the show, looked splendid wearing a veiled 1950s hat, miniskirt and cowboy boots.

Take note that both the Monterey Museum of Art and the Carmel Art Association are now charging $1 per glass for semi-cool white wine at their openings.

"Colors of Spring: Florals and Landscapes" was the theme of the reception held April 4 at the former Castro family adobe which was built in the mid-1850s and is now the Monterey Museum of Art/La Mirada. The event was elegant, with ample platters of raw veggies, chicken tidbits, cold cuts and those swirly roll-ups, the current craze.

Meanwhile, at the Carmel Art Association, which has been housed in the same building on Dolores since 1933, each artist honored by a show must provide hors d' oeuvres for the night's party. At one, I remember eating finger-length jicama with an accompanying dip of peanut butter mixed with chili sauce which I have since pirated as my own.

The Carmel Music Society's concert featuring violinist Joshua Bell and pianist Jean-Yves Thibaudet presented a reception afterwards that was starkly elegant with a tasteful flower centerpiece. It featured wine and trays of crustless tea sandwiches which, although a bit heavy-handed in the cream cheese department, were a very nice late night snack. These were fol-

Questions, questions

What happened to the attractive red-tressed harpist at the Bay Club in Pebble Beach? It was such a distinctive touch for the beautiful room, and one of the few places with an alternative to a piano background. I like the piano ambience, but I ADORE a dulcet harp with my elegant dinner. Don't you agree?

Monterey in the fore

Congratulations all around to the behind-the-scenes staff who worked so hard to make this year's annual Monterey Wine Festival a roaring success, and to all the attendees who had the good sense and good taste to pack each event. Next Monterey business and fun event is the Chamber of Commerce's Spring Trade Fair scheduled for Wednesday. To participate or attend call: 648-5356

In response to several requests for Wendy Brodie's Highlands Inn mushroom event lasagna, here is a simplified (!!!) adaptation for your own cooking (and eating) pleasure. I think I'd rather invite Chef Wendy to potluck dinner and ask her to bring the pasta dish!

Wendy Brodie's Portobello Mushroom Lasagna

Serves 6

1 pound lasagna pasta*
2 cups bechamel sauce with 1/2 cup grated onion, sautéed in butter
2 cups Sundried Tomato Sauce
6 large portobello mushrooms
1 large bunch fresh basil leaves
1 basket yellow pear tomatoes, halved lengthwise
1 small (5 ounce) goat cheese log
3 cups mix of freshly grated Parmesan and gruyere cheese

The day before. Make sun dried tomato sauce and refrigerate.

Traveling Gourmet

By Lotte Mendelsohn

*Homemade Lasagna Pasta

2 extra large eggs
2 1/2 cups unbleached all purpose flour
1 cup cornmeal
Pinch of salt
A drizzle of white wine if dough seems dry
Flat leaf parsley (Wendy embedded this in several sheets as a decorative last layer of pasta. Looks gorgeous, but not necessary for flavor).

Proceed as usual with your favorite homemade pasta modus operandi, rolling dough to 1/16 inch thickness and cutting into 2-inch wide strips. *Alternative, cook (very al dente) one package Italian commercial lasagna pasta, rinse with cold water and lay out on clean, cotton kitchen towel.

 Timbercrest Farms Sundried Tomato Sauce

Yield: 3 cups

2 cups boiling water
2 cups Sonoma dried tomato halves
1 cup chopped onion
2 Tbsp. olive oil
1 large garlic clove, quartered
1 cup orange juice
1 tsp. salt
1/4 tsp. pepper
2 Tbsp. parsley, chopped
1 Tbsp. fresh basil, chopped
2 tsp. dried oregano
2 tsp. lemon juice
Pinch saffron

Combine water and tomatoes in bowl and set aside. In a medium skillet, sauté onion in olive oil, until transparent. With slotted spoon remove one-third of the tomatoes and reserve. In container of blender or processor purée the remaining tomato/water mixture with the garlic and the orange juice. Return purée to skillet and simmer gently for 10 minutes. Stir in remaining ingredients and simmer one minute. Remove from heat.

Assembly:

Grease a large, round (three-quart) baking dish with olive oil. Lay in one layer of pasta and cover with dollops of bechamel and sundried tomato sauces. Spread a bit with back of a large spoon. CLASSICAL CONCERT REVIEW

Dubravka Tomsic displays virtuosic pianism in recital

By LYN BRONSON

PIANIST DUBRAVKA TOMSIC, appearing under the auspices of the Monterey County Symphony Chamber Ensemble and Recital Series at Sunset Theater, proved to be the complete pianist. It would appear that there is nothing she cannot do at the piano. She has the virtuoso's technical equipment, a lovely tonal palette, and a warm and engaging personality that evokes an enthusiastic response from her audience.

Some of the best playing of the evening was in her performance of Ravel's Miroirs. In Oiseau tristes, her limpid tone painted lovely images as she molded and shaped the musical line with great skill and taste. In Une barque sur l'ocean, she again brought much feeling to the score with delicacy and refinement. In the Alborada del gracioso she made light of the great difficulties in the score, whipping off facile repeated notes and double-note glissandos (some on the black keys, yet) as though they were child's play. In Ravel's Toccata, which followed, Ms. Tomsic again played with consummate ease and made a lovely statement with this very difficult work.

There were problem areas on the program, however. The opening work, Mozart's Fantasie in D Minor, K. 397, was a curious affair, rather in the style of Beethoven than of Mozart. It was slow and ponderous, seemingly in an attempt to be profound. The essentially operatic style of this work, with its constantly shifting moods and character was missed altogether. Pianistically it was finely executed, but musically it was puzzling and unsatisfying.

The two Brahms Rhapsodies, Op. 79, were more in the style of Tchaikovsky, than of Brahms. Passages marked forte were played fortissimo, which might sound fine in the Royal Albert Hall, but which here overwhelmed the acoustics of Sunset. There is no question of Ms. Tomsic's command at the piano, and there were some lovely moments, but the overplaying tended to detract from the musical effect.

Excessive speed and banging

After intermission Ms. Tomsic played the four Chopin Ballades. To play them one after another as a group is always an extraordinary achievement, since each looms larger than life even when played as an isolated piece. Here again, playing too loudly and too rapidly marred her otherwise excellent playing. The middle of the G Minor Ballade was so lovely it took the breath away, and yet the overall effect was coarsened by excessive banging in climatic moments and in the great coda. The loud passages in the F Major Ballade were so percussive it was difficult for the ear to isolate and identify the pitches being played. The Third and Fourth Ballades similarly suffered from excessive speed and banging.

Ms. Tomsic responded to a standing ovation with two encores. The first, Polichinello (Punch) from the Prole do Bébé by Villa Lobos started out loud and percussive and was a caricature of the original piece. However, the second and final encore, the concert transcription by Alexander Siloti of J.S. Bach's Prelude from the Klavier-Büchlein für Wilhelm Friedmann Bach received a knock-out performance. In the style of the late Emil Gilels, Tomsic took a repeat of this piece and the second time brought out the lovely inner voices. During this final pianissimo playing, I have never heard the ambient sound in Sunset Theater any quieter. You could have heard a pin drop people were listening so intensely. It was worth the whole concert.

■ Born in New York City, Lyn Bronson is a graduate of Yale University and the Yale University School of Music. He studied in New York City with pianists Artur Balsam and Bruce Hungerford. He completed his graduate studies at California State University, Fullerton, and became a member of the piano faculty. He was subsequently an instructor in piano at Hartnell College and the Hartnell College Conservatory of Music in Salinas.

Bronson has been an active solo performer in California. He has been a member of the faculty of CSUMB since September.

THEATER REVIEW

Unicorn offers solid staging of slightly weary comedy

By MARK SHILSTONE-LAURENT

OH GREAT. Now I suppose I'm going to start thinking "She Loves You" and "I Wanna Hold Your Hand" sound flat and dated. Because even though it's an acknowledged classic, that's how I felt watching Unicorn Theatre's current mounting of Joseph Kesserling's dark comedy "Arsenic and Old Lace."

It isn't the production itself — Colleen Finegan's direction has pace, energy and balance and the performances range from good to excellent. But aside from a wonderful lunatic uncle who thinks he's Teddy Roosevelt (brilliantly portrayed by Ron Cohen), the jokes seem a bit stale.

But that's enough time spent on that, because the audience clearly loved it. The production itself — not what might be a dated script — deserves our focus.

"Arsenic and Old Lace" tells of two sweet spinster sisters (Neva Hahn and Lenore Opalach) who poison gentlemen callers with their own special elderberry wine, to kindly save them from the loneliness of widowhood. Then "Uncle Teddy" is called upon to bury them in the cellar, thinking they are "fever victims."

A visit from the truly sinister brother Jonathan Brewster (Rob Foster) and his sidekick Dr. Einstein (Robert Coulter) add comic spice. And romantic lead Mortimer Brewster's love life and his startling discovery of his dear aunties' unique brand of hospitality round out the plot.

Scenic designer Carey Crockett has done an amazing job of creating the illusion of an expansive living room with a flight of stairs leading to a second story, all within a tiny space at The Hoffman Street theater. Margaret Voss' costumes, circa 1940s, provide just the right look, rounding out the solid technical aspects of the show.

As for Finegan's direction, she does a nice job with a pretty decent stable of actors. She keeps the pace cranking along and manages to move a lot of bodies smoothly and efficiently in a dang small space.

The only real problem, and it may actually be an actor rather than director problem, comes in the latter stages of Act Two and into the Third Act. The madcap tension and energy that drive the show seem manufactured rather than real and this definitely flattens the production. It seems to be a case of the actors pushing the comedy rather than letting it naturally grow out of the situations and the lines.

But on balance, the performances are generally strong. The one that shines brightest, however, is Ron Cohen's fantastic portrayal of the charmingly deranged "Teddy" Brewster. He just shows up every couple of scenes, gets eight to 10 laughs, and then exits by charging up San Juan Hill (the staircase), sword drawn, yelling, "CHARRRRGE!" This is one dream of a supporting role.

Not since his wonderful portrayal of Dale Harding in "One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest" has he been given a role that allows him to show off his fine characterization skills instead of his text skills. And Cohen relishes the opportunity. Ready for a big fat tired cliche? His performance is worth the price of admission. There. And it's true.

The real anchors of the play, however, are the sweet Brewster sisters Abby (Hahn) and Martha (Opalach). These two are a perfect complement to each other both physically and in their acting styles. They work together with such ease.

And Foster and Coulter are appropriately dark and comical. Foster uses his bulk and some grotesque makeup to create a truly menacing Jonathan. And of course Coulter squeezes every drop out of the bumbling sidekick, Dr. Einstein.

The last of the main roles is Mortimer Brewster, played by Lucien Leutzinger. He has the toughest assignment because he's asked to play one of those roles that has come to be so associated with a particular actor's performance, in this case Cary Grant's rendition in the movie. It's an awfully tough standard to live up to, and Leutzinger doesn't quite have the charisma and natural charm of a Cary Grant. But he gives a credible performance and brings plenty of good energy to the production.

The remainder of the cast is solid, not a clunker in the bunch. Skip Kadish in particular creates two totally different characterizations as The Rev. Dr. Harper and Dr. Witherspoon.

CLASSICAL CONCERT REVIEW

Camerata Singers introduce gemlike Baroque works

By NATHALIE PLOTKIN

CATCHING THE JOYOUS upwelling of the spring season Saturday night in the Carmel Mission, Vahe Aslanian chose a program for the Camerata Singers which brought them to a fine level of achievement vocally and interpretively. Dr. Aslanian is noted for his sensitive, imaginative and innovative programming, yet when analyzing what was offered, it is easy to see that the felicitous array of music depended as much on the depth of involvement and musicality of his singers as on its actual content.

As an ardent proselytizer for the music of the Italian Baroque composer Leonardo Leo (a contemporary of J.S. Bach), Dr. Aslanian has introduced several of his works to local audiences. The "Te Deum Laudamus" was a fine warm-up for the chorus and orchestra to open the concert. It is joyous, celebratory and thoroughly appealing music, and the performers created ringing resonances in the Mission's brilliant acoustics. There were delightful vocal echo effects and eager responses. The exultant outpouring set a pattern that pervaded the evening.

"Responsoria de Venerabilis" may be an uninviting title for four hymns by Haydn, but they turned out to be gemlike works. They were very different in musical style from the Leo and the chorus sounded even more at ease with their Classical Era pages. With solid vocalism and heartfelt projection in one section and a vibrant, vigorous choral workout in another, this was a new acquaintance musically and a very enjoyable and worthwhile one.

Haydn's "Missa Brevis Sancti Johannis de Deo" was another such appealing discovery. The singers brought out dramatic overtones as the text sped by (as is customary in a Missa Brevis) yet the "Et Incarnatus est", "Crucifixus" and "Et Resurrexit" were smoothly and sensitively outlined.

Soprano soloist Pamela Sebastian added a special glow to the evening with her superior vocalism. Haydn wrote a lovely "Benedictus" and Ms. Sebastian was the ideal protagonist with a voice which filled the Mission with a warm, tenderly projected tone.

Dynamic purity

The second half of the program was devoted to the music of Mozart, progressing from one of his last works on down to some very early ones and each one was a delight to listen to. The "Ave verum corpus" K. 618 was intoned with reverent smoothness. The tonal balance was refined and marked with dynamic purity. It was a special high point of the evening. The "Sancta Maria" K. 273 is a lifetime away in its youthful exuberance and the chorus was in particularly good shape here as well.

Another pinnacle of enjoyment came with Pamela Sebastian's exquisitely encompassed performance of the motet "Exultate, jubilate" K. 165. Mozart was 17 when he composed this sparkling Italianate exercise in coloratura vocal technique. Ms. Sebastian has the wide vocal range and the glittering flexibility to encompass the dangerous demands as well as the beauties of the work. Her voice sparkled and smiled throughout the elaborate trills and ornaments of the extended "Hallelujah" section. It may be familiar, but one seldom hears it from as accomplished a singer as this one.

The final work, "Benedictus sit Deus" K. 117 is the creation of the 13-year-old composer and it was an exuberant, joyous, lustily sung choral free-for-all which projected great good will and virtuosity.

A wonder of wonders was the orchestra which was well conversant with the music, well synchronized with the chorus and didn't drown them out until quite late in the proceedings. That too was quite an achievement.

Pianist Abbey Simon appears Tuesday

THE CARMEL Music Society presents pianist Abbey Simon in a program of works by Beethoven, Schumann and Chopin. The recital will begin at 8 p.m. Tuesday at the Sunset Theater in Carmel.

Simon began to improvise on the piano at age 3. He had natural perfect pitch and began taking lessons at age 5.

Simon's albums for Philips, EMI, HMV and Vox make him one of the most recorded classical artists of all time. Despite this enormous outpouring of recordings, Mr. Simon has stated that he prefers live concert performance.

"Unlike the recording studio where everything is done in bits and pieces, a recital engenders a high level of energy on both sides of the footlights. The audience and the artist are in a give and take situation. For the touring performer the air is always different, the piano is always different, the acoustics are always different and therefore, the dynamics of a performance has a quality of its own. Though the repertoire might be the same, it's a totally new experience every time and this is what I love."

Tickets for Simon's performance are $25, $20 and $15 and may be purchased at the door or by calling 625-9938.

DOG BITES DON'T HAVE TO HAPPEN!

Dog bites are something every canine owner and every parent should be aware of, that any dog has the potential of biting. The recent case of a young boy, badly injured by a dog he had played with many times is a sad example. But this story shouldn't make people fear dogs, it should encourage us all to be more "dog smart."

The most important thing a dog owner can do to prevent biting is training! Socialize your dog, teach your dog limits and appropriate behavior and be able to control your pet! Dogs don't just bite because they are vicious. "Nice" dogs may bite if they are teased, hurt or feel threatened, so being in control of your dog and supervising others, especially young children from dog bites is to teach them about dogs, when its ok to approach a dog and when its not. The SPCA brings this information into classrooms around Monterey County with our Dog Talk program. Handlers and their well-trained dogs show children what is the safest behavior around dogs, what to do it you encounter a strange dog or if you are threatened by a dog. This program is free of charge, and teachers may call 373-2631 or 422-4721 ext. 222 for more information.

At home with the architecture of fear

"I only fear that fear has replaced reason"

— From the 1952 sci-fi movie, "The Day the Earth Stood Still"

California Trends

By Bradley Inman

OVER TIME, the architecture profession has had a scad of hopeful designers who promised to change the world with new ways of constructing buildings, planning communities and shaping the landscape. Inequality would be banished, the economic pie would be re-sliced and people would work harmoniously together in houses and neighborhoods built through the eye of the social activist architect.

Of course, the world still has its ugly parts, but many in the profession haven't given up on their quest to right the wrongs wrought by bad design. Indeed, one way to attack the problems is by thrashing away at those building trends that make the world less friendly and egalitarian.

That certainly was the purpose of an enterprising and thoughtful University of Cincinnati assistant professor of architecture, Nan Ellin, who offers a broadside on gated communities with her radical new book, "Architecture of Fear."

The "American middle class is forting up," says University of Southern California urban planing professor Ed Blakely, who estimates that as many as eight million Americans live in gated communities.

■ Bradley Inman, whose syndicated column appears weekly in The Carmel Pine Cone, has an Internet home page at http://www.inman.com.

> 'The American middle class is forting up.'
> — Ed Blakely, professor of urban planning, University of Southern California

Gated communities are most popular in Los Angeles, Phoenix, Chicago, Houston, New York and Miami, according to Blakely, who wrote a guest essay on "Fear of Architecture," Princeton Architectural Press, New York, 1997. These cities also happen to be the locations where the murder rate is the highest.

The book points to the many ways we divide ourselves through design and building patterns. There is New York's Battery Park, surrounded on three sides by water; enclosed suburban malls; freeway concrete walls; barbed wire mesh on the roofs of apartment buildings; and chain link fences surround public housing projects.

Then there are the classic gated communities in the new tract subdivisions, or the older urban middle class communities in Miami and Los Angeles, that erected barriers at the entrance to their neighborhoods.

All of these building plans are a reaction to fear. But they not only protect, they escalate the paranoia that many people associate with urban life.

The book takes a long journey through history to explain our current fascination with building walls, gates and dividers between our neighborhoods and our

Urban planning professor Peter Marcuse, in his essay, "Walls of Fear and Walls of Support," examines the first wall of fear, the Great Wall of China, which was built in 228 B.C. to protect against invasions from the north of China.

In her introduction, Ellin traces the practice of fortess-like building patterns to the French Revolution, which "created new power structures and new sources of fear." The world got new leaders, the metric system, different political entities and new streets and place names.

While the preeminent idea at the time was freedom — divorce from feudal order — there was a new mood that accompanied liberation: insecurity that goes hand-in-hand with change. Industrialization in the early part of this century added to the fear and distrust, according to Ellin, and the modern information age also puts people off balance and spawns uncertainty.

This distrust is often about racism and ethnic isolation, in which people separate themselves from people whom they fear or feel threatened by, or conversely they bring us together with what we are familiar with.

Of course, there have been reactions to building with fear. Modernism was in part an attempt to change the course of isolation.

"The modernist opening up of interior space reflected a desire to be released from traditional societal morays and barriers among social classes, ethnic groups, generations and genders," said Ellin.

Another reaction was neotraditional planning, which brought back the small town and attempts to recreate a time when walls weren't so prevalent.

Finally, the book offers hope from cyberspace, where essayist Udo Greinacher describes a pluralistic community on the World Wide Web that teaches us about the exciting dimensions of other people's lives, "a bustling environment similar to the San Francisco described by noted writer Dashiell Hammett in the 1920s."

THREE MORE BIG CONSIDERATIONS

There is an old saying about the three crucial factors in determining value in real estate — location, location and location. Actually, there are also three more factors — timing, timing and timing!

Real estate values tend to go in cycles, with property values reflecting what is going on in the community. If the local economy is doing well, prices tend to increase. During an economic slowdown, prices tend to stabilize or decrease. People who have done very well with real estate over the years have great instincts about when to buy and sell. They have mastered the art of buying when the market is on the way down and selling when it is on the way up, without a lot of concern about whether they made the best possible bargain in the transaction. They understand that investments are long-term, so it may take years for a rental property to turn a great cash flow or for the equity to become substantial. In the real estate business, timing is absolutely crucial.

APRON STRINGS...

lowed by my favorite melt-in-your mouth snow white meringue cookie chasers.

The spring tea at the Yellow Brick Road, the thrift shop of choice adjacent to the Barnyard, is always a dandy. Where else can you sip coffee poured from a silver samovar, munch on cookies and cakes while shopping for recycled treasures?

Superhuman effort

The effort that Ilene Tuttle puts in creating her biannual Monterey Airport exhibits is superhuman. The latest, titled "Three at a Time," features collections from local museums and fanciful student-drawn postcards. It was justly rewarded by an opening reception and here came those Swirlies again.

The Peninsula Outreach open house out at Fort Ord's Lexington Avenue on April 6 celebrated the organization's opening of its transitional womens' housing. When these nine apartments are fully occupied, they will be able to accommodate 36 formerly homeless single women and women with children.

The outstanding feature of this opening beyond the goodwill that this effort imparted to all who attended was the large array of flowers blooming throughout the newly refurbished complex. The blooms were arranged by case worker Carol Klender. The flowers were donated by Casa de Flores and Swenson and Silacci.

5-star award

My personal nomination for the 5-star food and ambiance award goes to the Mozart Society, which offers several concerts a year at the Church of Religious Science in Monterey and a reception afterwards. The board of directors brings the hors d' oeuvres, which range from homemade cookies, to polenta nibblies topped with a dab of flavored cream cheese and a nasturtium petal, to rounds of open-faced cucumber sandwiches.

Annelise Suter does an angel-light Pizza Napoletana stacked with salami, olives and anchovies which she learned in Switzerland years ago. The long, linen-covered table was highlighted by flowers donated by Flowers Ltd. located in Carmel Rancho. For a $10 ticket, the whole evening is enchanting.

Miss Brower has probably gone to heaven by now but I thank her for the lesson in praise. Long live openings!

Rare Finds on the Peninsula

California Closets

If your garage has turned into a parking place for everything but your car, and your home office resembles a maze of scattered paper, then call on the experts.

CALIFORNIA CLOSETS. Simplify Your Life

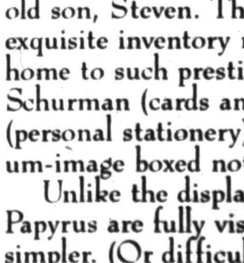
California Closets has made an art out of solving home storage and organization woes. The showroom is at 26366 Carmel Rancho Lane, Suite E, at the entrance to the Barnyard, Carmel. Here, owners Eric and Monica Baggiolini, will help you take the first steps in bringing order to chaos.

For 14 years, California Closets has served the storage needs of Monterey County residents. They travel to people's homes and offices and suggest ways to double the hanging space in a closet, or make an office a work space instead of a "black hole" for important data.

California Closets can install its system, or prepare a kit, if the customer is handy. Don't put it off: make that call: 620-0146.

Gepetto's Collectibles

Dennis Smiley, owner of Gepetto's Collectibles, has decided to retire. Offered at reduced prices is his inventory of treasures designed to bring out the child in us all. This Crossroads shop houses items sure to please the gift giver and the serious collector.



Investigate the glass paper weights, musical jewelry boxes, fine wooden nutcrackers from Steinbach and Milford. Miniature cottages from David Winter and Lilliput Lane, gnomes by Tom Clark, and forest animals by Tim Wolf delight the collector.

You'll find Chillmark pewter sculptures and fine porcelain figurines. The young at heart will encounter an array of soft huggable plush animals from the world over, including Steiff from Germany.

Not to be overlooked is the handmade teddy bear collection and antique reproduction porcelain dolls.

Visit Gepetto's Collectibles at 233 Crossroads Blvd., Carmel. 625-6162.

Jon Stuefloten Painting

As Jon Stuefloten likes to put it, "I couldn't be more local unless I was Junipero Serra." The namesake of Jon Stuefloten Painting is also the son of Hugh Comstock's building superintendent. He literally "grew up in the trades," attending Sunset School and Carmel High. From Lyle Ingram, Stuefloten learned the Old World techniques of making paint from scratch, marbleizing and faux finishes.

His company offers a level of expertise seldom found today. Jon Stuefloten Painting tackles both residential and commercial projects. And even if the name is not familiar, you've probably already seen his work: the Mediterranean Market remodel, the original and new Casanova's, several buildings at the intersection of San Carlos and Ocean.

"We are known for being thorough and professional, giving the client the best quality that we know how," he says. To secure his services, call 645-0475.

Papyrus

Pure silk ribbon, sumptuous wrapping papers, stationery of near-decadent quality... Beautiful things are the stock-in-trade of Papyrus, located in the middle level of Carmel Plaza.

The shop was recently acquired by William and Lena Moore, who are proud parents of a 13-month-old son, Steven. They also express pride in the exquisite inventory maintained at Papyrus, which is home to such prestigious names as Marcel Schurman (cards and wrapping paper), and Crane (personal stationery) and a large selection of museum-image boxed notes.

Unlike the displays at many shops, the cards at Papyrus are fully visible, making selection that much simpler. (Or difficult — there is such great variety). They can fill orders for wedding and party invitations. Papyrus is home to journals, frames, sealing wax and a family of classic Winnie the Pooh gifts: from night lights to music boxes.

Papyrus is open daily. Call 626-6441.

A Feature of THE CARMEL PINE CONE

The Balloon Platoon tries to turn itself around to the amusement of all on Pine Avenue Saturday.

Pacific Grove celebrates Good Old Days with a flair for fun

Social Spotlight

By Dodie Barkley

THE TIME: Saturday a.m.
The place: Lighthouse Avenue, Pacific Grove.

"Mommy, hold this," a tot implores, handing his mother three sticky pieces of gum, which she tosses into her spacious diaper bag filled with everything from Vaseline to a Batman toy that is rat-tat-tatting louder than a bullhorn.

A woman rushes into a local coffee house yelling, "Will the guy who owns the brown truck parked in back of my van, move it!" as the people next to her quietly erect their "Thai-Chinese Eggroll and Rice" cubicle. Grandmothers in coats, hats, sweaters, gloves and scarves hold tightly to their grandkids dressed in shorts and cut-away tops — all eyes glued to the chocolate cake a vendor is cutting.

"Now, remember, honey — at 11 it's the quilt show, no, the parade — wait a minute, I'll go get the program out of the car," a woman says to her husband and three kids as her teenage daughter screams, "Oh, no, we're not going together!"

Huge quilts are shown at the historic Chautauqua Hall.

Security guards with walkie-talkies ride on golf carts, constantly checking on how it's going in other parts of town. Vendors carry boxes of doughnuts and paper cups of hot coffee, emanating cries of, "Hot, ooh, too hot to carry" as they rush to their food booths to open up.

Los Angeles police officers and sheriffs stand stiffly at attention while their wives stroke their backs with long sticky instruments to remove lint.

"Calamari, calamari combo, pasta, pasta pesto, clams, pizza bread," shouts a food seller as a woman tries to urge her large golden retriever to come out from under a truck. Retrievers know about shade!

Gorgeous arts and crafts. Sets of hand-painted wooden Monarch butterflies — $43; handmade denim dresses with sunbonnets and lace panties for infants that made you want to have a baby (No, no! Just kidding!) Lovers walking with secret smiles; two little girls, arms entwined, running from booth to booth giggling with abandon, as a tiny dachshund puppy joyously licks the toenails of a great gray poodle gazing down.

10 a.m. — Pine Avenue

Dick Vreeland graciously invites me to sit on the grandstand to watch the parade as Mark Carbonaro, velvet-voiced announcer from Radio KOCN/105 FM, describes all 80 entries with aplomb. With sirens blaring from motorcycles and P.G. fire department trucks, Grand Marshall Steve Gorman, Realtor, with his kids Brian and Kevin, are driven down the avenue, followed by P.G. Mayor Sandy Koffman in a Model-T Ford and Monterey County 5th District Supervisor Dave Potter, while hundreds of families standing and sitting on porches cheer with abandon!

The P.G. City Council, in another Model-T Ford, followed by the P.G. High School Band, an original Wells Fargo Stagecoach and an old-time fire engine, draw sentimental whisperings as 50 million mothers take pictures of their kids playing in the band, and balloon sellers hawk their wares to the crowds.

Clowns, kids doing powerful martial arts movements, The Salvation Army, race-walkers, the famous "bicycle" police officers, Feast of Lantern princesses, The Aquila Real Dancers from Seaside in their gorgeous Spanish costumes, and the most spectacular drum and drill team I have ever seen called "Peacemakers," consisting of tiny tots and older kids, again from Seaside, bring thunderous applause from watchers, as do yellow, pink, black and aqua-colored vintage cars and a '59 Lincoln Continental which must have been 25 feet long.

Of course, the Balloon Platoon was invited again because it is the funniest parade act anywhere. The quilt show at historic Chautauqua Hall quite beautiful again this year with winners proudly standing by their entries for picture taking. Jazz bands, blues, ragtime and other bands are entertaining all over the place in P.G. as people chew on hot dogs and fries and drink beer and Cokes and watch the pie-eating contest. P.G.'s Good Old Days — you betcha, and this year greater than ever!

Doug Thompson, with his daughter Paige, examines the card he received from all his co-workers at The Carmel Pine Cone. A farewell party in Thompson's honor took place Thursday, April 10 at Michael's in the Barnyard.

■ The Pine Cone bids farewell to Doug Thompson

Doug Thompson, who has been our managing editor and more recently publisher at The Carmel Pine Cone, was feted Thursday, April 10 at a farewell dinner given for him by Bill Brown, former owner of the newspaper.

Though I was happy for Doug, I felt very sorry for myself because I don't ever want to say good-bye to him. Doug is the finest editor/publisher I ever worked for. He possesses a sense of well-being that brings out the best in everyone. I watched moody young writers become caring people under his tutelage. He tried to make my copy look better, and when he'd change my writing or delete something, he'd say with great modesty, "Please don't get mad — I just want clarity." How could I get mad at him when he and his assistants made my column look so good?

Hundreds of readers told me that his chief contribution to the newspaper was the important personnel changes he made; he got rid of the dross and brought in fine writers who were rarin' to go.

I know that Doug will go somewhere where others will see in him what I do — a bright, soulful, sensitive, sweet, beautiful guy! So, I won't ever say good-bye, Doug — just aloha, toodle-oo for the nonce.

■ Friends of Monterey County Symphony 'April in Paris' party sizzles!

Ah, Monsieurs, Mesdames et Mademoiselles, since you live in paradise, why leave? Patti Bumpus, auction co-chair, told me that became the motto of the very pretty "April in Paris" fashion show/banquet presented by The Friends of the Monterey County Symphony last Saturday at the Monterey Marriott.

We were ensconced right beneath a marvelous rendering of La Tour Eiffel (The Eiffel Tower), gazing directly at another amazing rendering of L'Arc de Triomphe, beautifully drawn and painted by Diana Hardy. The artist received a great deal of applause for her Parisian-inspired designs which decorated the entire San Carlos Ballroom.

Following cocktails, wine tasting and the silent auction with music by Sal Mercurio, a delicious dinner was served as 10 prize drawing gifts, including an overnight stay at the Marriott with dinner for two at Ferrante's, were given away to lucky ticket holders.

Handsome Hunter Finnell, KION-TV46 sportscaster/director, is an irresistible master of ceremonies, auctioneer and comedian. It is easy to see why so many organizations use this talented man to emcee their banquets. Finnell had us all in stitches as he tried to get us to bid on the live auction items which included sculpture, a Mexican dinner for eight, a tennis luncheon and garden barbecue.

Nancy Williams, president of the Monterey Opera Association, delivered lovely French songs in the chanteuse manner. Her mellow voice was a delight, as was her French accent.

The evening ended in an outstanding fashion show, which was choreographed by co-chair Lucretia Butler. Take a bow, Lucretia. What a show!

Using a background of recorded voices of French singers performing fast, upbeat numbers, the models literally danced out on the runway with males in tuxedos sometimes following them, dancing with them, or being spurned by them. It was like watching a marvelous ballet. The fashions were all from Rittmaster's of Carmel, and each outfit seemed to be perfectly matched to the model who wore it. Just incredible!

Heather Pease, winner of the gold medal in synchronized swimming at the Olympics last summer, made a superlative runway model. The last part of the program was choreographed using the "Habanera" aria from the opera "Carmen." Some of the models were such excellent dancers, they showed how beautiful the evening gowns looked in motion. Butler should receive an award for a superb production.

For information about The Friends of the Monterey County Symphony, call 624-8511.
